SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This edition of Department of Justice Investigative Files, Part III: The Use of Military Force by the Federal Government in Domestic Disturbances, 1900–1938, contains a variety of telegrams, letters, reports, manuscripts, newspaper clippings, and background materials that provide insight into the U.S. government's use of federal troops to restore and maintain order in cases of domestic disturbance, particularly race riots and strikes.

These nineteen reels compose the "Glasser File," a collection of documents that Justice Department attorney Abraham Glasser assembled in the late 1930s while drafting a study on the issue. As a side note of interest, Glasser was suspended from the department in 1941 on charges of communism and espionage; he later resigned based on a separate charge. Though he was not found guilty on the communism charges, they continued to trail him through many other positions, and in 1953 he found it necessary to invoke the Fifth Amendment in testimony before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Glasser arranged the documents for this file into several loose groupings, including background materials, chronological files, information on specific strikes and riots, and handwritten drafts of his study. The background materials include all U.S. statutes through 1937 pertaining to the militia, armed forces, customs administration, and presidential powers, among other topics (Reel 1, Frames 0006–0634). Next there are relevant excerpts from published works on constitutional law, English law, and martial law, including the quoted views of founding fathers such as John Adams, James Madison, and Thomas Jefferson (Reel 1, Frame 0635 through the end of Reel 2).

Other background files present court decisions interpreting the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Reel 12, Frame 0259 through Reel 13, Frame 0952); articles from law journals and other periodicals concerning martial, military, and constitutional law (Reel 13, Frame 0953 through Reel 15, Frame 0345); Bureau of Labor Statistics data on retail prices and wages (Reel 7, Frame 0532 through Reel 8, Frame 0510); federal emergency plans for domestic disturbances, including protection of strategic industries and buildings (Reel 8, Frames 0526–0698); World War I restrictions on enemy aliens (Reel 6, Frame 0427); and surveillance of radical activities.

In his handwritten study drafts and working papers (Reel 9, Frame 0863 through Reel 12, Frame 0258), Glasser places the "prodigal use of federal troops" in historical context. He points out that during World War I, many of the states' National Guard forces that would have normally dealt with internal disturbances were serving overseas, making it necessary to authorize federal troops to preserve domestic order. Though this development was understandable, Glasser notes that the president and the War Department further relaxed administrative standards by abandoning the "preliminary proclamation required by law and customarily issued before federal troops are used" in such circumstances (Reel 10, Frames 0716–0717).

In addition to exploring the broader evolution of the “troop-habit,” Glasser discusses several examples in detail, particularly the 1917 Arizona copper strikes; the 1917–1920 miners’ strikes in Butte, Montana; the 1917 labor disturbances in Washington State’s lumber industry; and the 1919 steel strike.

Throughout his study, Glasser quotes extensively from primary source documents. The chronological files (Reel 8, Frame 0699 through Reel 9, Frame 0862) organize some of these original documents by year, from 1917 to 1932, for a basic timeline overview, but the files relating to specific domestic disturbances form the heart of the collection (Reel 3, Frame 0001 through Reel 6, Frame 0426). They are arranged in alphabetical order by the state or city involved; the material covers nearly thirty different states plus the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. Prominent correspondents in these sections include Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, General Tasker Bliss, Massachusetts Governor Calvin Coolidge, Felix Frankfurter, Arizona Governor George W. P. Hunt, U.S. Congresswoman Jeannette Rankin, President Woodrow Wilson, and General Leonard Wood.

The importance of copper to the wartime effort heightened the federal government’s concerns over the potential involvement of enemy aliens and other subversives in the 1917 Arizona copper mine strikes. The presence of Mexican and Austrian immigrants among the striking workers drew careful attention, as did the Arizona governor’s possible ties to members of the radical labor organization Industrial Workers of the World (IWW). Government communications relating to the Butte, Montana, copper strikes (1917–1920) reflect similar concerns. The telegrams and letters collected here document the decisions to use federal troops in both instances. In addition, there are documents on the infamous “Bisbee deportation” of 1917, in which armed vigilantes rounded up over one thousand striking miners in Bisbee, Arizona, and abandoned them across the border in New Mexico. There are also reports on federal investigations into the activities of known and suspected IWW members in Arizona and Montana.

Investigations of IWW members and other radicals form a large portion of the files on the steel strikes in Gary, Indiana (1919–1921) and the shipyard strikes in Seattle, Washington (1918–1920). In October 1919, General Leonard Wood considered the risk of violence in Gary so high that he placed the city under qualified martial law.

As in the case of copper, lumber was of key importance in the U.S. war effort, particularly in the manufacture of aircraft. As the documents show, workers employed in the Pacific Northwest lumber industry labored in isolated, “unsocial” conditions and had unique concerns. Threats of violence and IWW activism among the lumbermen in Washington State led to federal involvement in the situation and even a proposal to form “lumber jack regiments” of military volunteers to procure the needed lumber.

Military intervention was also a factor in the 1919 Boston, Massachusetts, police strike and in strikes of streetcar workers in Chattanooga and Knoxville, Tennessee (1917, 1919); Columbus and Savannah, Georgia (1918–1919); New Orleans, Louisiana (1920); and Denver, Colorado (1920). Other incidents covered in these files include strikes of dock workers (New Orleans, 1919; New York, 1919) and garment workers (New York, 1917).

Federal troops proved useful in quelling racial violence as well as labor unrest. There is material here on race riots in Arkansas (1919–1920); North Carolina (1918, 1920); Virginia (1918); Chicago, Illinois (1919); Lexington, Kentucky (1920); Omaha, Nebraska (1919); Charleston, South Carolina (1919); and Washington, D.C. (1917, 1919). On a few occasions, the federal government supplied troops for smaller scale law and order duties, as in the case of the November 1917 Ivie Mickle murder trial in Texas. During Prohibition, states such as Florida and New Jersey also requested federal assistance in blocking the illegal importation and trafficking of alcohol.

The final few reels (from Reel 15, Frame 0346 through the end of Reel 19) contain miscellaneous material. There is, for example, extensive correspondence from 1913 relating to the United States v. U.S. Steel Corporation antitrust litigation, as well as deposition testimony from 1892 regarding a telephone patent case. Other items include Congressional Record installments from 1934 and 1936, summaries of court decisions affecting labor, post-World War I legal claims of U.S. businesses and individuals against Germany, and ticket stubs.

This collection offers a detailed look into the early twentieth-century history of and justifications for the federal government's use of military force in maintaining domestic order. Students of U.S. labor history, U.S. military history, or constitutional law will find the documents especially useful.

The Department of Justice Investigative Files series also includes Part I: The Industrial Workers of the World and Part II: The Communist Party. Other LexisNexis titles concerning American radicalism and government surveillance include The Communist Party USA and Radical Organizations, 1953–1960: FBI Reports From the Eisenhower Library; FBI Files on Black Extremist Organizations; FBI Files on White Extremist Organizations; Federal Surveillance of Afro-Americans (1917–1925): The First World War, the Red Scare, and the Garvey Movement; Newspapers of the American Communist Party; Radical Periodicals in the United States, 1881–1960; Records of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, Series A: Subject Correspondence Files, Part 6: Suppression of Radicals; Records of the Subversive Activities Control Board, 1950–1972, Part I: Communist Party USA and Part II: Communist-Action and Communist-Front Organizations; The Strike Files of the U.S. Department of Justice, Part 1: 1894–1920; Surveillance of Radicals in the United States, 1917–1941; and U.S. Army Surveillance of Dissidents, 1965–1972: Records of the U.S. Army's ASCI Task Force.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major correspondents in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing correspondence by the person begins. Hence, 3: 0737 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0737 of Reel 3. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microfilm publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the subject begins. Hence, 1: 0635 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0635 of Reel 1. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.
