INTRODUCTION

What did the President know, and when did he know it? The answers to these questions have been of interest not only to those concerned with Richard Nixon's culpability during Watergate and Ronald Reagan's role in the Iran-Contra scandal, but also to every student of the modern presidency. The Dwight D. Eisenhower Diaries series of Eisenhower's presidential papers (the "Ann Whitman File") is the most complete record available of any President's actions, and this microfilm edition presents the currently available material in the Diaries series. The 28,000 pages of letters, memoranda, reports, and diary entries enable researchers to trace in detail President Eisenhower's role in the decision-making process and to understand the information and advice that was available to him when he acted. While The Diaries of Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1953-1961 is not the complete record of the Eisenhower administration, it focuses so sharply on Eisenhower himself that historians and political scientists can for the first time properly assess Ike's performance as leader of his political party, the nation, and the Free World.

The Eisenhower Diaries file was created and maintained by Ann C. Whitman, Eisenhower's personal secretary and the principal record keeper for the Oval Office. The Diaries were part of Eisenhower's personal papers, which were kept separately from the White House Official Files maintained by the permanent White House staff. The entire Ann Whitman File, now located in the Eisenhower Presidential Library in Abilene, Kansas, contains approximately a quarter of a million pages of documents and records. The Eisenhower Diaries series, which accounts for about 11 percent of that total, is basically a distillation of all of Eisenhower's records. Retrieving information was made easier by the peculiar arrangement of the files--unlike the other major Whitman File series, and the White House Central Files, the Eisenhower Diary series was arranged chronologically rather than by name or subject. Thus, the Eisenhower Diaries file serves as a running, day-by-day account of Eisenhower's actions from 1953 until 1961. It was apparently designed to serve as the basis for historical accounts both during and after Eisenhower's presidency, and in fact it provided the framework for Eisenhower's two volumes of memoirs (Mandate for Change and Waging Peace). Since that time the Eisenhower Diaries series has become a rich source for historians, biographers, and political scientists who are determined to reassess the man and his era. Taken as a whole, their work has resulted in a major rehabilitation of Eisenhower's reputation.

The Eisenhower Diaries series contains a number of different kinds of records arranged chronologically by month and by year. The nature of the records kept changing over the course of the Eisenhower administration, and the titles of the file folders for each month varied considerably over the eight-year span. There is only one folder, however, that is arranged by subject: the Bricker Amendment folder, which is filed with material from March-April 1954, contains memoranda and communications dating from April 1953 to February 1957. The documents in this file overlap those arranged chronologically throughout the rest of the collection.

Within the Eisenhower Diaries is a subsection containing documents with which Eisenhower was personally involved as drafter or dictator. These folders were given various titles: "DDE Diary"; "DDE Personal Diary"; or "DDE Dictation." Other folders containing these categories of material are labeled, "Diary--Copies of DDE Personal." Within these variously titled folders are diary entries that Eisenhower dictated to Ann Whitman on an occasional basis throughout his presidency. Although Eisenhower revealed little of his innermost self in these entries, he did use his diary to express his views on the public events and personalities of his day. In this he was following the practice he had established as Supreme Allied Commander during World War II, when he dictated journal entries in order to clarify his own thinking and to flesh out the historical record. The World War II diaries proved essential when he wrote his wartime memoir Crusade in Europe; doubtless he wished to have a similar personal record to rely upon when it came time to write the history of his presidency.

The Diary/Dictation folders contain letters as well as journal entries. These letters, which Eisenhower personally dictated, are to friends, family members, public figures, and members of his administration. Letters written to Eisenhower are, as a rule, missing; often such incoming documents may be located in such other series of the Whitman File as the Administration series, the Dulles-Herter series, and the Name series. Even without incoming letters, however, Eisenhower's correspondence shows him at his best: a writer of clear, concise prose who could put a personal touch into a formal directive or acknowledgement. As John Kenneth Galbraith has noted, his letters were "firmly and unpretentiously literate," and their publication here, for the first time, will do much to erase the lingering misconception of Ike as a fuzzy, fumbling incompetent.

One section of the Eisenhower Diaries that should not be overlooked is the "Diary--Copies of DDE Personal" file. This file contains a number of items from the first Eisenhower administration that are not available elsewhere. Among these items are hitherto unpublished Top Secret diary entries concerning the important Bermuda Conference of December 1953. Also of interest are some drafts of other diary entries, with extensive emendations that Eisenhower added by hand, and some handwritten diary entries.

Another particularly valuable subseries in the Eisenhower Diaries contains records of Eisenhower's telephone conversations. The President's phone calls were monitored by Ann Whitman, who took notes and subsequently made records of what she heard. These are not complete transcripts, but the sense of the conversation is given, often at some length. The notes are particularly rewarding because they are informal and immediate, showing Eisenhower receiving information and opinions, speculating out loud on possible courses of action, and directing that certain things be done before any paperwork was generated. Here, too, are Eisenhower's candid assessments of Washington personalities and glimpses of behind-the-scenes maneuvers that never made it into the newspapers. In one March 1954 conversation, for example, Eisenhower told Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey to get Texas oilman Sid Richardson to press Senate Democratic leader Lyndon Johnson to support administration measures. Eisenhower pointed out that Richardson "was really the angel" who had supported Johnson financially, and that Richardson could get Johnson "into [the] right channel" by threatening to support a political rival in a future contest for Johnson's Senate seat. There are also many conversations concerning foreign policy and national security affairs.

Eisenhower's leadership style was characterized by his skillful use of meetings and conferences to elicit the views of his subordinates and peers, and to engender a consensus once the decision had been made. Historians are fortunate that Andrew J. Goodpaster (and his colleague, John S.D. Eisenhower) carefully and thoughtfully recorded the proceedings in a large number of these very important meetings. These records, often termed "Memcons," are found in files with titles of "Goodpaster"; "Staff Notes"; "Memo on Appointments"; "Diary Staff Memos"; and "Miscellaneous." There are a few Memcons found in other files as well, including the DDE Diary folders.

The richness of these records is evident at first glance. A typical "Memorandum of Conference with the President," dated January 13, 1956, recorded a meeting of Eisenhower, the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and the secretaries of State, Defense, and the Treasury. They discuss the allocation of uranium for the purpose of developing civilian power plants--a variation on Eisenhower's "Atoms for Peace" theme. Goodpaster's notes show the group considering the military, diplomatic, and public relations aspects of the President's decision to stimulate the atomic power industry. The memorandum also describes the expansion of the concept to cover shipment of both atomic fuel and nuclear weapons overseas to American allies. Another Goodpaster memorandum, dated two months later, describes Eisenhower pushing his Joint Chiefs of Staff away from their customarily parochial military viewpoint in their consideration of problems involving resource allocations. Seeking to win JCS, and later, congressional support for his foreign aid program, Eisenhower is shown persuading the military leaders to agree upon a formal statement that would enable the United States to take forceful, yet nonmilitary, action in the Middle East.

The Staff Notes/Memos--Miscellaneous files also contain a wide variety of staff memoranda and reports, including minutes of cabinet meetings and conferences with legislative leaders (kept by L. Arthur Minnich); State Department memcons; records of briefings held before presidential press conferences; draft messages; summaries of congressional mail addressed to the President; appointment schedules; and other incoming correspondence and staff memoranda. For the period 1953-55 many of these records may be found in folders bearing the title, "DDE Diary."

One of the most difficult jobs that any President has is that of keeping control over the many activities of the executive branch of government. In the second half of his administration, Eisenhower was aided by regular, concise summaries of agency activity prepared by the White House Staff Research Group. Each of these summaries, called "Toner Notes" after Albert P. Toner, head of the group, deals with a number of subjects. Also, each subject bears a separate security classification, from Unclassified and Administrative Confidential to Top Secret. Fortunately, some of these notes have been declassified and appear in this edition of the Eisenhower Diaries. These staff notes, including special, single subject supplements, often bear President Eisenhower's initials and handwritten comments. They are found in files variously labeled "Diary Staff Memos"; "Staff Memos"; and "Toner Notes."

A smaller, but even more intriguing set of files comprises intelligence briefings compiled from State Department and Central Intelligence Agency notes by Goodpaster and John Eisenhower. Here, too, a large number of items have been withdrawn, but those remaining deal with topics of great importance and sensitivity. These memoranda are given such titles as "Synopsis of State and Intelligence material reported to the President," and "Note for Record--Re Intelligence and State Department Items." They deal with a wide variety of subjects relating to foreign affairs and overseas political developments. The intelligence items provide a fascinating glimpse into the state of mind of White House, State Department, and CIA decision makers and advisors. The files containing these items are entitled "Goodpaster Briefings" or, later, "Briefings," and begin in June 1958.

Two other sets of files give a good indication of the course of President Eisenhower's day and the daily flow of paper and people through the Oval Office. From 1956 through 1958 Ann Whitman kept separate "Signatures" folders. These files list, on a daily basis, the various letters, proclamations, and other documents that Eisenhower was to sign or initial. On any given day the President would affix his signature to ten or fifteen listed items (aside from legislative enactments), and these lists provide a good indication of the correspondence to which Eisenhower gave his personal attention. Another set of records, kept in separate folders from June 1957 until January 1961, consists of Eisenhower's schedules and appointments books. These very detailed logs, containing both on- and off-the-record appointments, are useful for determining the nature and amount of presidential activity. They show, in a succinct and revealing form, the sources of information Eisenhower received, and the identity of those men with whom Eisenhower felt he had to cultivate good relations. The first reel of this collection contains detailed appointment calendars and itineraries covering the 1952 campaign, Eisenhower's post-election trip to Korea, his schedules as President-elect, and the first weeks of his presidency.

It would be hard to overestimate the research value of The Diaries of Dwight D. Eisenhower. Contained in these 28,000 pages are documents that reveal, as no other source can, the complexity of the man and his impact upon a pivotal era in American history. Indeed, it would not be too much to say that the history of the 1950s cannot be written without consulting the Eisenhower Diaries.

The Eisenhower Diaries collection makes it possible, for the first time, to explore the carefully hidden private side of a very public man. Eisenhower's warmth and gregarious nature come through clearly in his many private letters to such friends as Edward "Swede" Hazlett and General Alfred Gruenther. Also revealed is a fascinating structure of relationships among the members of the Eisenhower family. Not only are the letters to his brothers Milton and Edgar filled with thoughtful comments on current public affairs, but the fact that he was communicating within his own family enabled Ike to vent safely his feelings of anger and frustration.

Eisenhower's hidden side is also revealed in many of his letters to public figures and world leaders. His correspondence with (and about) Winston Churchill is exceptionally interesting, especially when contrasted with the candid remarks that the President was making in his diary at the same time. In one journal entry, for example, he described the British prime minister as "a curious mixture of belligerence and of caution, sometimes amounting almost to hysterical fear" (Diary, December 10, 1953). In an Eyes Only-Top Secret cable sent ten days later, however, Eisenhower patiently and respectfully discussed the issues Churchill had raised concerning Egypt, the Middle East, and the European Defense Community, concluding that it was "quite necessary that there be the clearest kind of understanding between us if we are at one and the same time to operate together in some of these critical situations abroad and still be able to withstand any kind of political problem and criticism that can arise in our respective countries."

Virtually every topic of interest concerning Eisenhower's presidency, and the decade of the 1950s, is covered in this research collection. The documents deal at length with the major political and diplomatic issues that Eisenhower had to cope with; they also provide data on social and economic trends that the executive departments and White House staff members felt should be brought to the President's attention. Researchers will find much new material on McCarthyism and Eisenhower's response to it; the origins of federal civil rights-desegregation policy; the development of the "New Look" defense policies; the modification and institutionalization of Roosevelt's New Deal programs; Eisenhower's eight-year battle to balance the budget; and his unceasing efforts to remold the Republican Party in his own, moderate image. There is also a wealth of detailed information concerning such foreign policy topics as the ending of the Korean War; crises in Indochina, the Middle East, the Formosa Straits, and Berlin; disarmament; the cold war and relations with the Soviets; and repercussions stemming from the collapse of colonialism.

An additional benefit conferred upon researchers is the inclusion of a large number of recently declassified documents, including diary entries not included in Robert Ferrell's admirable letterpress edition of The Eisenhower Diaries. A number of items concerning nuclear weapons, the pre- and post-Sputnik space program, and America's relations with her allies are published here for the first time. Even researchers who have already exploited this collection in Abilene will profit from a reexamination of this microfilm edition. At the beginning of most folders are withdrawal sheets that list the classified and previously classified items in that file. These withdrawal sheets indicate when items were released, declassified, or sanitized (i.e., released with still-classified portions deleted). Readers should be warned, however; the process can work in reverse, and some items previously released have been reclassified and are thus unavailable here.

Notwithstanding these few remaining problems of classification and access, the Eisenhower Diaries have already played a pivotal role in an ongoing reassessment of the Eisenhower presidency. Scholars like Fred Greenstein, Robert Griffith, Blanche Wiesen Cook, and Stephen Ambrose have all shown that Eisenhower was a much more able and forceful President than a previous generation of scholars had supposed. The documentary record now made widely available in The Diaries of Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1953-1961 also has enabled these and other writers to correct the misimpression that the decade of the 1950s was a placid, uneventful period not worth examination and irrelevant to present-day concerns. From the tortuous peacemaking process in Korea to the U-2 spy plane crisis in 1960, the Eisenhower administration was beset by a number of problems whose repercussions still affect present-day life. This edition of documents--an inner history of a decade--should be one of the most valuable research collections published in modern American history.

NOTE ON SOURCES

The documents in this collection are from the Diaries series of the Ann Whitman File from The Papers of Dwight D. Eisenhower as President of the United States, Dwight D. Eisenhower Library, Abilene, Kansas.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Diaries of Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1953-1961 consists of a varied body of manuscripts that contains several categories of material, arranged chronologically by month and year.

An estimated 5,200 pages of diary entries and dictated correspondence is filed in folders entitled "DDE Diary," "Personal Diary," or "DDE Dictation." The bulk of the actual diary entries falls into the years 1953 to 1956.

Another prominent category is memos of telephone conversations with the more detailed conversations dating prior to 1959.

The largest body of material is the official White House staff memoranda, reports, correspondence, and summaries of congressional correspondence. These types of documents are found in folders labeled "Miscellaneous," "Goodpaster," "Staff Memos," and, after 1957, "Staff Notes." Herein are the "memcons" prepared by Andrew Goodpaster and John Eisenhower.

From 1956 to the end of the administration, the user will find the "Toner Notes," so named for Albert P. Toner who, with fellow White House Research Group member Christopher H. Russell, daily prepared two- to three-page summaries of the activities and programs of the various executive branch agencies. Beginning in 1958, the President also received intelligence briefings prepared by Andrew Goodpaster and John Eisenhower.

These categories of material are divided into folders that are arranged chronologically. The contents of each folder are arranged in reverse chronological order. Each folder contains a "document withdrawal sheet." The "document withdrawal sheet" itemizes the documents that have been removed--withdrawn--from the folder due either to national security or privacy restrictions by the Eisenhower Library. UPA has microfilmed, in its entirety, all of the material currently available.

REEL INDEX

The frame number on the left side of the page indicates where a specific file folder begins. These folders are typically a chronological grouping of documents. Numbers in parentheses following a file folder title indicate multiple file folders dealing with the same subject and date, which are numbered sequentially.

In the interest of accessing material within folders, this index denotes the major substantive issues, reports, and key policy matters under the category Major Subjects. Individuals who figured prominently in the files are also included in this listing.

References to the President are noted by his initials, DDE.
