INTRODUCTION

For many years prior to John F. Kennedy's inauguration as president, black people and their white sympathizers had sought to attain equality under law and equality of opportunity for Americans of African descent. It was during the Kennedy years, however, that a social movement—the Civil Rights Movement—actually came into being. By 1963, hundreds of civil rights protests were taking place across the country, directly involving hundreds of thousands of people, and indirectly affecting many more. Indeed, in 1963, civil rights was the dominant public issue in the United States.

There is no way of determining with precision how much the Kennedy administration contributed to the creation of this social movement, but there can be little doubt that it played an important role in its birth and development. By word and deed, through rhetoric and substantive action, President Kennedy helped bring about what was sometimes called a revolution of rising expectations. He never urged people to take to the streets—indeed he was politically discomfited by their doing so—but he fostered an atmosphere where protests against the status quo could and did occur.

In fact, the Kennedy administration and the Civil Rights Movement had a symbiotic relationship, with each encouraging the other to take the next step, until a social movement came into being and President Kennedy responded in turn to that movement by proposing the most comprehensive civil rights legislation since Reconstruction. He thereby initiated what could reasonably be called the Second Reconstruction.

Although Kennedy and civil rights advocates held comparable views about the ultimate objective of a society free of racial discrimination, they often differed over tactics and timing. In early 1961, for example, when Freedom Riders directly challenged racially segregated transportation facilities in the South, Kennedy urged civil rights activists to concentrate their efforts on voting rights instead. When voting rights workers who were arrested and terrorized by local officials asked for federal protection, the administration seemed reluctant to provide it or incapable of doing so.

Likewise, in the 1960 campaign, Kennedy promised to sign an executive order against discrimination in housing, but he failed to issue such an order in his first months or even his first year in office. Advocates of open housing sent hundreds of pens to the White House as reminders of Kennedy's campaign promise to banish housing discrimination with the "stroke of a pen." Finally, in November 1962, he did issue an executive order on housing, but a narrowly drawn one. Meanwhile, Martin Luther King, Jr., in 1962 called upon Kennedy to mount the "bully pulpit" and preach to the nation about civil rights, but he did not do so until the spring of 1963, after King had led highly publicized street demonstrations in Birmingham, Alabama.

Kennedy was constrained from acting as forcefully or as quickly as civil rights advocates would have liked by historical belief and legacy and by political considerations. The first Reconstruction left many legacies, among them the notion that Washington should not forcibly impose its will upon the South. When he came into office,

Kennedy fully subscribed to that view. After he encountered intransigent Southern officialdom, however, particularly in Mississippi and Alabama, he began to doubt the lessons of history with which he had begun.

Political considerations were even more constraining. Kennedy owed his narrow election to his ability to hold the traditionally Democratic South while also attracting a high percentage of black voters nationwide. But in the Congress, white Southern Democrats whose constituencies were unsympathetic and often hostile to black civil rights held considerable sway. Kennedy badly needed the help of these Southern Democrats to enact the rest of his legislative program and he always feared, with good reason, the divisive potential of a push for civil rights legislation.

On the other hand, Kennedy was impelled to press civil rights issues because of his strong predilection to be an activist president—to assert leadership from the White House, not to be swept along by events. He was also concerned that racial discrimination and violent incidents in the United States, such as the riot that occurred when the University of Mississippi was desegregated in 1962, damaged American influence and credibility abroad, especially in the nonwhite world. Thus, Kennedy's response to civil rights was played out against a complex setting of ideas and personality, of institutions and history, and of morality and politics, both domestic and international.

In a 1977 book, John F. Kennedy and the Second Reconstruction, I described and analyzed that setting and its consequences. My principal sources for that book were the holdings of the John F. Kennedy Library, which was then temporarily located in Waltham, Massachusetts, and is now in its permanent home in Boston, Massachusetts. The Kennedy Library remains the fundamental resource for this subject. But for students and researchers who cannot easily get to the Kennedy Library, this series, Civil Rights during the Kennedy Administration, 1961–1963, is the next best thing, for it contains some of the most important records from the White House Central and Staff Files and the President's Office Files pertinent to its subject. Part Two of this series, for which there is a separate introduction, is drawn exclusively from the Burke Marshall Papers.

The records in this series document the Kennedy administration's efforts to use executive action to reduce or eliminate discrimination in public transportation and public accommodations, federally assisted housing, education, and employment (both federal and among federal contractors). They illustrate some of the difficulties Kennedy had with Congress and the stresses and strains that developed between the Kennedy administration and civil rights groups, on the one hand, and between the Kennedy administration and the white South, on the other. Most significantly, they show a dynamic situation, one that changed over time, as the Civil Rights Movement grew in scope and intensity and Kennedy responded to that movement in turn.

As important as these records are, it should be noted, they do not tell the whole story. The thorough researcher will also want to use the Kennedy Library's very good oral history collection and Robert Kennedy's papers, both of which, it is hoped, will eventually be available on microfilm. Likewise, he or she will want to examine the papers of civil rights organizations and activists and those of political figures who were involved in these events, some of which will be available on microfilm. But this series is an excellent place to begin exploring this important and fascinating subject.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Part 1 of Civil Rights during the Kennedy Administration is drawn from three major record groups found at the John F. Kennedy Library: the White House Central Files (in particular, the Subject File), the White House Staff Files, and the President's Office Files.

The White House Central Files

The White House Central Files were designed as a reference service for the President and his staff to document White House activities. The Central Files consist of four major components: the Subject File, the Name File, the Chronological File, and the Confidential File. The Name File is essentially an index to the Subject File. The Chronological File contains only copies of outgoing correspondence. (This file is closed.) The Confidential File contains material that was regarded as security or administratively classified. This publication utilizes the Subject File.

The Subject File of the White House Central Files contains correspondence and reports pertaining to the functions and operations of the White House; the federal government; and state, local, and foreign governments. The Subject File also contains correspondence and reports from private companies, organizations, and individuals. Material in the Subject File is segregated into two categories: "Executive" and "General."

The "Executive" Subject File material consists of correspondence and reports that are of particular importance due either to their source or content. This material generally includes documents received from executive agencies and departments, members of Congress, and other prominent correspondents. It also includes copies of outgoing correspondence and memoranda, as well as other documents that were acted on or brought to the attention of the President or a designated key White House official.

The "General" Subject File material consists of correspondence and documents from the public-at-large and other sources that, while noteworthy because they are addressed to the President, are not as important from the viewpoint of level of handling or subject matter as the "Executive" Subject File material. This material generally includes all correspondence and documents that are not classified in the "Executive" category and may include routine communications from members of Congress or memoranda exchanged among lower echelon officials.

The Subject File of the White House Central Files consists of 62 subject categories, totalling 440 linear feet. This publication utilizes those subject categories that emphasize the civil rights issue. These include: HU (Human Rights); HU 2 (Human Rights—Equality of the Races); LE/HU (Legislation/Human Rights); LE/HU 2 (Legislation/Human Rights—Equality of the Races); SP/HU (Speeches/Human Rights); SP/HU 2/ST 24 (Speeches/Human Rights—Equality of the Races: States—Mississippi); SP 2-3/HU (Speeches—Special Messages/Human Rights); HO 3 (Holidays—Bill of Rights Day/Human Rights Week); IT 47-9 (International Organizations—U.N. Commission on Human Rights); and FG 634 (Federal Government—Commission on Civil Rights). These subject categories are divided further into more specific topics. Listed below are the subject categories that are included in this publication, with a short description of the contents of each, as well as a note on the selection process used for each category.

The FG 634 "Executive" Subject File material was filmed in its entirety. The "General" Subject File material was not filmed in its entirety. Selections include correspondence by prominent individuals and organizations, both favoring and opposing civil rights measures; reports and studies generated by lobby groups and other private organizations; and a small portion of public opinion mail. Much of the "General" Subject File material that was omitted from this publication consists of letters requesting free information on the Commission on Civil Rights.

The White House Staff Files

The White House Staff Files contain material used by White House staff members in their day-to-day operations. This material was normally kept in the staff members' immediate offices and was not filed in the White House Central Files. These Staff Files consist of correspondence, memoranda, and reports relating to the issues and problems on which a staff member was working. The Personal Papers Collection of an individual staff member provide additional material of this nature, as well as material of a more personal nature.

The White House Staff Files included in this publication feature the papers of staff members who had key positions in counseling the President on the civil rights issue. These staff members are Charles A. Horsky, Presidential Adviser on National Capital Affairs; Lee C. White, Assistant Special Counsel to the President (Legislation and Messages); and Harris L. Wofford, Jr., Special Assistant for Civil Rights. The staff files of Claude Desautels and Myer Feldman are also included in this publication, as they demonstrate the interaction between the executive and legislative branches in the area of civil rights.

Since the above-mentioned staff members had a variety of duties throughout the Kennedy administration, this publication is selective, reproducing from the White House Staff Files only the files on civil rights. Included on the next page is a list of the White House Staff Files included in this publication.

The President's Office Files

The President's Office Files were not a formal or complete record of the Executive Office of the President or of the White House. They were originally a set of working files kept by President Kennedy's secretary, Mrs. Evelyn Lincoln, for the President's immediate convenience. These files were housed in Mrs. Lincoln's office outside of the Oval Office. The President's Office Files consist of 136 boxes of material totalling 73 linear feet.

The President's Office Files consist of 12 series. University Publications has micro-filmed only parts of three series: the Speech Files; the Legislative Files; and the Subject Files. Selections in these series were based upon relevance to the civil rights issue. A description of each series and a list of the files included in this publication are provided below.

The Speech Files series of the President's Office Files contains, in chronological order, speeches, remarks, announcements, and proclamations by the President. A major portion of the material in these files is official press copies of speeches, but there are also numerous reading copies, drafts, memoranda, and other supplementary and background material. The Speech Files are rich with the President's and his advisers' notations and comments, since reading copies and drafts were used to make notations and changes. This publication includes only those files pertaining to civil rights, Plans for Progress, and the situation at the University of Mississippi. These files were microfilmed in their entirety. These files can be found in boxes 40, 42, and 45. The files utilized in this publication are listed below.

1. Radio and Television Report [to the Nation] on the Situation at the University of Mississippi, September 30, 1962.
2. Remarks [of the President to the Participants] on the Signing of the Plans for Progress Bill, January 17, 1963.
3. Radio and Television Address on Civil Rights, June 11, 1963.

The Legislative Files series of the President's Office Files was constructed by the staff of the Kennedy Library out of small files on legislation that were scattered throughout the President's Office Files. What has emerged is a series that highlights the efforts of the White House to have the administration's legislative programs enacted. The files include notes on meetings with congressmen, reports on the progress of legislation, messages to Congress, memoranda, and correspondence from individual congressmen. This publication includes only those files that pertain to civil rights. These include files on civil rights in general, the Special Message on Civil Rights, and the Civil Rights Act of 1963. These files have been filmed in their entirety. The files included in this publication are listed below.

1. Civil Rights Activities, March 18, 1961 to March 30, 1961.
2. Civil Rights Activities, November 1961.
3. Civil Rights Activities, March 21, 1962 to March 31, 1962.
4. Civil Rights Activities, January 1963.
5. Civil Rights Activities, Special Message on Civil Rights.
6. Civil Rights Activities, June 1963.
7. Civil Rights Activities, Draft of the Civil Rights Act of 1963, June 13, 1963.
8. Civil Rights Activities, July 1963.

The Subject Files series of the President's Office Files contain material relating to governmental and nongovernmental organizations, to the states, and to specific issues. The Subject Files series is one of the largest in the President's Office Files. One of the most heavily documented topics found in the Subject Files series is that dealing with civil rights; it covers a total of 15 files in boxes 96 to 98. These files contain material on the "March on Washington"; White House meetings with attorneys, labor leaders, and religious leaders; the Alabama and Mississippi situations; and the state of the civil rights movement itself. These files have been filmed in their entirety. The files included in this publication are listed on the next page.

REEL INDEX

The frame number on the left hand side of the page identifies where a specific folder begins. These folders are typically a chronological grouping of documents from the various Executive departments, Congress, and private individuals and organizations. In the interest of accessing material within folders this index denotes the major substantive issues, reports, and key policy formulations under the category of Major Subjects. Individuals who contributed significant correspondence, wrote particularly insightful memoranda, or authored reports within folders are denoted under the category of Principal Correspondents. As the President was integral to virtually all decisions and proceedings, there are no listings for President Kennedy.
