INTRODUCTION

From its inception in 1909, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) had as its principal objective the enforcement of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments in order to secure constitutional rights for black Americans. For more than two decades, however, the attention of the organization was devoted primarily to the struggle against mob rule and lynching, disfranchisement, and residential segregation ordinances. Occasionally the association and/or its local branches became involved in battles against school segregation, principally in northern towns and cities that attempted to establish segregated school systems in place of previously integrated systems as a result of the growing black migration from the South.

As the NAACP charted its legal strategy for the 1930s it decided to shift its major emphasis to the problem of educational segregation and discrimination in the South. The inauguration of this campaign was facilitated by a grant from the American Fund for Public Service (generally known as the Garland fund). This grant enabled the NAACP to establish a full-time paid legal counsel for the first time in 1936. The man selected for the post, and who set the basic tactics for the litigation, was the prominent black attorney and dean of Howard University Law School, Charles H. Houston. Two years later his former student, Thurgood Marshall, took over the helm of the NAACP's legal department and the struggle against Jim Crow education.

The NAACP's strategy in the educational equality cases was two-fold. One campaign was aimed at southern state universities, demanding the admission of blacks into those graduate and professional programs (such as law, medicine, and journalism) for which no provision had been made at the black state colleges. The other campaign was aimed at demanding equalization of public school education at the elementary and secondary levels--equalization of school facilities, school-term length, and especially of teachers' salaries. A frontal attack on school segregation per se was postponed, partly because it was felt that such a direct approach would fail in the courts and partly because the NAACP operated on the theory that a truly equal dual-school system would be so expensive that it would collapse under its own weight. (This approach, of course, did not take into account either the urban school segregation that would remain because of ghettoization and housing segregation, or the amount of money white southerners proved to be prepared to spend to maintain the dual-school system.)

Closely related to the legal strategy of the education cases were other important NAACP objectives. These included the building of local NAACP branch membership by appealing to black school teachers--then undoubtedly the largest group of black professionals in America and, as such, better able to contribute dues and articulate voices to the association. Another important objective involved the efforts of Houston and the national staff to develop a network of impeccably professional black attorneys to wage the educational and other civil rights legal campaigns in coordination with local branches and the national office.

As the documents in this collection demonstrate, what in retrospect appears to have been a program of litigation that was shrewdly planned from the very start was in actuality a struggle characterized by a spirit of experimentation and flexibility. The most successful thrust of the strategy at first was the salary equalization cases. Then, in 1949, following the NAACP's success in Shelley v. Kramer (the 1948 Supreme Court decision declaring restrictive covenants to maintain housing segregation unconstitutional) and the declaration against segregation made by President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights, the NAACP and its attorneys decided to shift their focus from the inequities in southern school systems to an assault on the very principle of school segregation itself. By 1950 the association had succeeded in persuading the Supreme Court to declare segregation in advanced professional training, such as law, inherently unequal. This landmark was established in two cases, McLaurin v. Board of Regents and Sweatt v. Painter, which are fully documented in this collection.

It is at this point that the record in the legal files of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at the Library of Congress becomes thin. By 1950 its tax-exempt legal arm, the NAACP Legal and Educational Fund, Inc., had (because of Internal Revenue Service regulations) become a completely independent organization, and the files of subsequent litigation are to be found in its archives. But the NAACP campaign for educational equality had set the stage for the series of cases that culminated in the famous 1954 Brown decision in which the Supreme Court struck down the "separate but equal" rationale for racial segregation in American society.

NOTE ON SOURCES

Original copies of the files reproduced on this microfilm can be found in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) collection at the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C. The files selected for Part 3-B derive from Group II (1940-1950) of the NAACP collection, Series B, Legal File and Series A, General Office Subject File.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Each file selected for this microfilm edition has been included in its entirety. Subsequent to the microfilming, however, Library of Congress archivists discovered additional materials of relevance to the Group II, Series B, Legal File of this publication. These materials were found in the course of the processing of the third group of NAACP Papers, at the Library of Congress, running from 1956-1970, which are as yet closed to the general public.

The newly discovered pre-1956 materials were correctly interfiled in Group II of the collection after the microfilming was done. Rather than refile the entire collection to accommodate the new materials, they were filmed as Reels 18 and 19. An indication at the point in the Reel Index where these materials would have been filmed as a matter of course has been made for each file, directing the user to the additional material on Reels 18 and 19.

A portion of the newly discovered material belonging to Group II, Series B, Legal File has not been included on this microfilm edition, however. These materials are approximately 1 1/2 feet of legal documents for the case of Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas. They have been archived in Boxes II-B-139-141, and these boxes are accordingly absent from the Reel Index of this user's guide under the subseries, "Schools" of the Legal File.

These materials were omitted because they were the only case for which the legal files in the area of educational equality extend beyond 1950, and because they are incomplete of themselves. The material pertains only to the Topeka, Kansas case and to none of the collateral cases that were grouped in the Brown litigation. Moreover, none of the background correspondence appears in the files; they are composed exclusively of legal documents.

The arrangement of the microfilm edition is as follows:

Group II, Series B, Boxes 136-138 and Boxes 142-147.	Legal File. Schools.
Group II, Series B, Boxes 173-182.	Legal File. Teachers' Salaries.

The selection of materials included in this microform edition was made by Professor August Meier, University Professor of History at Kent State University. The object of the publication has been to include every file series from the Legal Department file and every supporting subject file of relevance to the Campaign for Educational Equality from the General Office File through 1950. Users are also encouraged to consult concurrent series of the NAACP collection that have been made available by University Publications of America (UPA) in microfilm editions for supporting materials on the campaign. Researchers should be especially alert to the possibility of correlative materials in the Board of Directors files and Special Correspondence files, which are included in Part 1 of the UPA edition of Papers of the NAACP.

Because the Library of Congress has reprocessed parts of Group II of the NAACP collection, an accurate container inventory was not available at the time of this microfilm edition. Researchers may wish to write the manuscript division of the Library of Congress as to future availability of a container inventory for Group II.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Legal File

The Campaign for Educational Equality, 1940-1950, consists of three general areas of legal activity: schools, teachers' salaries, and universities. School cases generally sought the equalization of facilities among segregated schools or the desegregation of school systems. Teachers' salary cases challenged the existence of separate and inferior pay scales for black educators. University admission cases concentrated on the admission of qualified black scholars to the state-funded graduate schools of their home states. Files typically document the development, litigation, resolution, and aftermath of attempts by black Americans to obtain educational equality. Documents include correspondence, memoranda, reports, transcripts, and legal briefs.

Spearheading the legal effort was Thurgood Marshall as Special Counsel to the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund. Providing advice and assistance were William H. Hastie, Charles H. Houston, Benjamin Kaplan, Leon A. Ransom, and Spottswood W. Robinson III. Assistant Special Counsels and Legal Research Assistants in the NAACP offices included Charles Anderson, Robert L. Carter, Edward R. Dudley, Milton R. Konwitz, Cassandra Maxwell, Constance Baker Motley, Marian Wynn Perry, Frank D. Reeves, Prentice Thomas, and Franklin H. Williams. Regional Special Counsel for the Southwest Division beginning in 1948 was U. Simpson Tate. In addition, the efforts of many local attorneys representing both the branch and national offices of the Association are fully documented. Of particular importance among these were Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, Sidney Redmond of St. Louis, A. Maceo Smith of Dallas, and A.P. Tureaud of New Orleans.

In the early litigation for educational equality, the NAACP's object was not to question the premise of segregated education. Rather, the Association sought to force equalization of educational facilities. However, in 1946, local attorneys representing the NAACP in the educational campaign met with Thurgood Marshall in Atlanta, Georgia, to review all cases pending in the South. This Special Lawyers Conference and other developments in the immediate post-war era document a shift in policy by the NAACP. No longer content to fight for separate but equal as a step toward desegregation, the association increasingly fought the very concept of segregation in any form.

Among the frequent correspondents were newspaper editors (see particularly the Schools File--Appeal for Funds on Reel 1, frame 0066). Prominent editors of the Negro press in these years included Roscoe Dunjee of the Black Dispatch, Louis Martin of the Chicago Defender, Carl Murphy of the Afro-American, C.B. Powell of the New York Amsterdam News, John Sengstacke of the Chicago Defender, and P.B. Young of the Norfolk Journal and Guide. These leaders of the black press were vital to the public relations effort associated with the educational campaign. Oliver W. Harrington and Henry Lee Moon as directors of Public Relations received memoranda and briefings on the details of the campaign.

Walter White and Roy Wilkins, as Executive Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the NAACP, respectively, provided logistical support and served as liaisons, between various elements of the public, officials, staff, and the Board of Directors of the association. Local and state branches queried the national office on potential cases involving educational opportunity and numerous peripheral matters. Gloster B. Current was Director of Branches and frequent correspondent in these files.
