SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The U.S. State Department Central Files are the definitive source of American diplomatic reporting on political, military, social, and economic developments throughout the world in the twentieth century. The files for 1960–January 1963 contain a wide range of primary materials arranged topically and chronologically: full texts of important letters and cables sent and received by U.S. diplomats and embassy personnel; legal documentation; reports and clippings from journals and newspapers; minutes of meetings with U.S. and foreign leaders; high-level government documents, including official reports, working papers, and memoranda; and transcripts or summaries of speeches, press conferences, and interviews.

Confidential U.S. State Department Central Files: Far East, 1960–January 1963 compiles recently released documents covering political, military, social, and economic affairs in the countries of East and Southeast Asia and Oceania. The 1960–1963 time span represents a critical period in the evolution of these countries, many of which were former European colonies.

An interesting aspect of this collection is the remarkable difference in perspectives of political leaders and diplomats from one country to another, one embassy to another, and even one U.S. department or agency to another. The material provides fascinating glimpses into the character and viewpoints of Asian personalities such as Tungku Abdul Rahman, Chiang Kai-shek, Mao Tse-tung, Norodom Sihanouk, Thanat Khoman, Ayub Khan, Jawaharlal Nehru, Souvanna Phouma, Ann Renova, Subandrio, Achmed Sukarno, and Ngo Dinh Diem; as well as prominent U.S. officials including John F. Kennedy, Lyndon Baines Johnson, Dean Rusk, Walt Rostow, Chester Bowles, W. Averell Harriman, J. William Fulbright, and Douglas MacArthur.

The following sections summarize some of the major topics and issues covered in the collection.

I. Internal Political Conditions and Communism.

The independent states of Asia sought to solve the many problems involved in building reasonably unified and stable political systems at the same time that they struggled to keep their countries free of both internal and external threats. These threats ranged from overt aggression, to covert insurgency, to internecine or tribal warfare, and most were shadowed by the perceived menace of Communist expansionism in the region.

The collection includes bodies of material on the competition for power within countries, with the competitors variously including charismatic leaders, political parties, military and civilian elites, ethnic and tribal groups, cities and subregions, and Communists.

Significant documents cover efforts by leaders in Laos, Vietnam, Thailand, Cambodia, and other countries to accommodate Communists in power-sharing arrangements or else to prevent the Communists from gaining power or building insurgency movements.

A substantial set of documents portrays the efforts by Malayan leader Tunjku Abdul Rahman to bring the scattered areas of his country, separated by sea and culture, together into a Malaysian Confederation. A fascinating complex of motives, strategies, and obstacles is involved, including the attempt by Indonesian President Sukarno to thwart the unification and Singapore's wish not to be included in the confederation.

II. Regional Cooperation.

A key theme that runs throughout the collection is the tension between the desire of countries to remain independent and the movement toward regional cooperation. Many of the countries of the Far East were intensely nationalistic. They shared few cultural traditions—even the forms of Buddhism they practiced were distinctly different—and in some cases countries had been ancient enemies. The historical animosities among the peoples of Indochina and those between Indonesia and its neighbors receive particular emphasis.

Countering this nationalism were repeated attempts to bring countries together under the rubrics of regional organizations in order to foster peaceful relations, spur economic development, or contain Communists. Often the attempts at multilateral cooperation met with at best partial success, because one or more of the countries dragged its feet when the time came to sit down and hammer out concrete arrangements. On the other hand, some regional cooperative entities, such as the Colombo Plan of intraregional aid, did function adequately, or at least continuously.

Some of the many proposed or established regional organizations covered in this collection are the Association of Southeast Asia (ASA), Association of Southeast Asian States (ASAS), Asian Peoples Anti-Communist League (APACL), another anti-Communist organization called "TAIPING," Organization for Asian Economic Cooperation, Southeast Asia Common Market, Asian Productivity Association, Joint Working Party on Economic and Cultural Cooperation Among Southeast Asian Countries, Pacific Community, and South Pacific Commission.

III. U.S. Policy and International Relations.

"Surely we are hooked in Vietnam," said U.S. national security adviser Walt W. Rostow in an August 1961 memo. This prescient statement illustrates the growing concern among Kennedy administration officials over the escalating infiltration and subversion of South Vietnam by the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese, and the need for the United States to increase its operations in the country. This collection includes a number of significant secret memoranda and position papers exchanged by top State Department, Defense Department, and White House players as they struggled to keep abreast of the insurgencies in Vietnam and Laos, formulated contingency plans for countering Communist aggression, requested additional U.S. personnel and funding, and tried to help the governments of other countries like Thailand and the Philippines prevent Communists from gaining footholds. Two of the collection's more interesting documents contain, respectively, Vice President Johnson's assertive report to President Kennedy on his 1961 Asia trip, and the views on U.S. Southeast Asia involvement expressed by General Douglas MacArthur in a meeting with John F. Kennedy, Dean Rusk, Lyndon Johnson, and others.

Although some Asian countries like Nationalist China and Thailand pursued staunchly anti-Communist policies, others like Cambodia and Indonesia tried to maintain neutrality. Some of their neighbors, however, feared that a neutralist stance would inevitably lead to a Communist takeover. Many documents in this collection show the intense bargaining and maneuvering involved in deciding a country's East-West orientation.

Looming in the background in almost every case was the giant to the north, Communist China. Taiwan, most prominently, feared aggression from the mainland, but so, to some degree, did Vietnam, Thailand, and the other countries in the Far East. The collection includes substantial material on the efforts of country leaders, as well as U.S. officials, to discern China's aggressive intentions and to formulate strategies to contain them.

The collection covers many other developments affecting the international relations and national defenses of Far Eastern countries, including country satisfaction or dissatisfaction with regional security arrangements, especially the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO) and the Security Treaty between Australia, New Zealand, and the United States of America (ANZUS); the proper security roles of Japan and Australia; the Indonesia-Netherlands dispute over control of Western New Guinea; country reactions to Pacific nuclear tests; sovereignty issues involving the Pacific Islands; the U.S. Mutual Security Program; U.S. arms sales; and a series of joint military exercises.

The largest single item in the collection (Reel 4, Frames 0001–0430) documents a political-military game called SIGMA, in which high-level administration officials and military officers tested alternative Communist and anti-Communist strategies.

The collection also includes a number of documents on South Asia. Topics covered include U.S. policies toward Pakistan, India, Afghanistan, Iran, and Nepal; the India-Pakistan dispute over Kashmir; and India's very different relations with the Soviet Union and Communist China.

IV. Economic Development and Social Affairs.

The collection includes material on various aspects of economic development in East and Southeast Asian countries, including international and bilateral development aid, technical assistance, U.S. foreign investment and business establishment, commercial relations, trade fairs, and industry sectors such as agriculture, manufacturing, mining and petroleum, communications, and transportation. A large set of documents chronicles the history of the Lower Mekong River Project, an international project that involved the participation of the United States, Japan, and other industrial countries and attracted competing offers from the Soviet Union and Communist China. The project was intended not only to conserve water but also to build goodwill for the Free World in the four Indochina countries.

The collection provides bodies of material on key social matters such as labor development and labor-management issues; the Peace Corps; education at different levels, as well as teacher training; women's roles in society; child health and nutrition; the Asian Games hosted by Indonesia, as well as Sukarno's successful effort to prevent both Nationalist China and Israel from participating; and international medical assistance, including the famous Medical International Cooperation Organization (MEDICO) led by Dr. Tom Dooley.

SOURCE NOTE

Microfilmed from the holdings of the National Archives, College Park, Maryland, Record Group 59: Records of the Department of State, Central Decimal Files, decimal numbers 790, 890, and 990 (Far East internal affairs) and decimal numbers 690 and 611 (Far East foreign affairs and U.S. relations with the Far East), for the period 1960–January 1963. All available original documents have been microfilmed.

ORGANIZATION OF THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE DECIMAL FILING SYSTEM

From 1910 to 1963 the Department of State used a decimal classification system to organize its Central Files. This system assembled and arranged individual documents according to their subject, with each subject having a specific decimal code. The decimal system from 1950 to January 1963 consists of ten primary classifications numbered 0 through 9, each covering a broad subject area.

CLASS 0: Miscellaneous.

CLASS 1: Administration of the United States Government.

CLASS 2: Protection of Interests (Persons and Property).

CLASS 3: International Conferences, Congresses, Meetings, and Organizations.

CLASS 4: International Trade and Commerce. Trade Relations. Customs Administration.

CLASS 5: International Informational and Educational Relations. Cultural Affairs. Psychological Warfare.

CLASS 6: International Political Relations. Bilateral Treaties.

CLASS 7: Internal Political and National Defense Affairs.

CLASS 8: Internal Economic, Industrial, and Social Affairs.

CLASS 9: Other Internal Affairs. Communications. Transportation. Science.

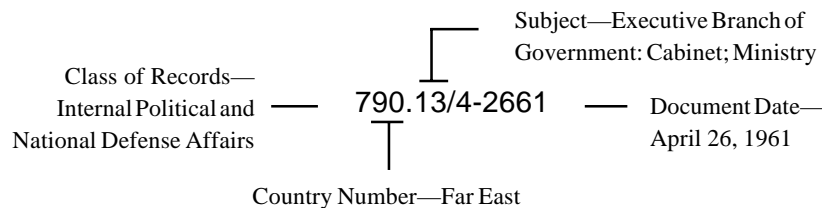

Internal Affairs

For this section of the U.S. State Department Central Files, LexisNexis has microfilmed the documents contained in Classes 7, 8, and 9. Within these classes each subject is defined by a decimal file number. The decimal file number is followed by a slant mark (/). The number after the slant mark (/) refers to the date on which the document was generated. Documents within each decimal file number are arranged in chronological order. The entire decimal file number is stamped on the right side of the first page of every document.

These classes are concerned almost exclusively with the internal matters of individual countries. The class number (7, 8, or 9) is followed by the country number. The number following the decimal point indicates subtopics within the major classifications. The date after the slant mark (/) identifies the individual document.

In a small number of instances, documents were assigned erroneous or incomplete decimal numbers. LexisNexis has included, in brackets, corrected decimal entries. In addition, misfiled decimal number documents have also been included in brackets.

Example, 790.13/4-2661

790.13/4-2661 indicates a document dated April 26, 1961, relating to the cabinet of the executive branch of government (13) in Far East (90).

Note: For the convenience of the researcher, wherever a specific classification number totals more than one hundred pages, a breakdown of the material by month and year is provided. When applicable, major subjects have been included with the month and year breakdown.

Foreign Affairs

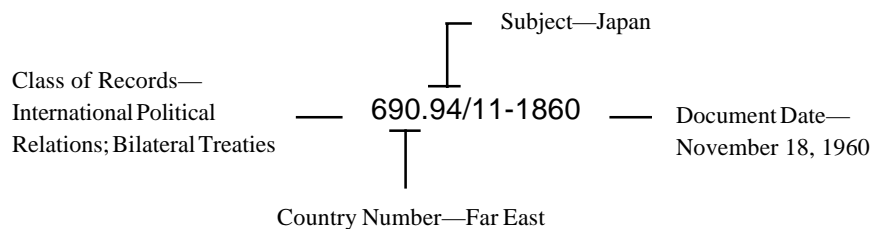

For this section of the U.S. State Department Central Files, LexisNexis has microfilmed the documents contained in Class 6. Within this class, each subject is defined by a decimal file number. The decimal file number is followed by a slant mark (/). The number after the slant mark (/) refers to the date on which the document was generated. Documents within each decimal file number are arranged in chronological order. The entire decimal file number is stamped on the right side of the first page of every document.

In this publication, records classified 690 deal with the foreign policy of the Far East and its political relations with other nations. Due to the State Department's arrangement of these records, countries assigned numbers below 90 will not be found in this file. LexisNexis, however, has included files dealing with the political relations between the United States (country number 11) and the Far East in this publication. In order to find the political relations between the Far East and countries other than the United States that have a number lower than 90, the researcher should check the Class 6 records for that country. These records can be found either at the National Archives, College Park, Maryland, or in microform publications that LexisNexis has made available to libraries.

In a small number of instances, documents were assigned erroneous or incomplete decimal numbers. LexisNexis has included, in brackets, corrected decimal entries. In addition, misfiled decimal number documents have also been included in brackets.

Example, 690.94/11-1860

690.94/11-1860 indicates a document dated November 18, 1960, relating to the bilateral relations between the Far East (90) and Japan (94).

Note: Whenever the documents under a specific classification number total more than one hundred pages, the guide writer provides a breakdown of the material by month and year. When applicable, the guide writer lists, in brackets under the classification number, major subjects that are covered throughout all of the months. The guide writer may list additional major subjects but only under the particular month and year in which they appear.

REEL INDEX

Entries in the index refer to specific documents within Confidential U.S. State Department Central Files: The Far East, 1960–January 1963, Internal Affairs and Foreign Affairs. The documents are arranged according to the U.S. State Department's decimal filing system. See the Organization of the U.S. Department of State Filing System section of this guide for a brief description of this system, as well as Sample Reel Index entries. For some decimal numbers, the guide writer has included additional topics (enclosed in brackets) following the decimal description. In addition, whenever the documents under a specific classification number total more than one hundred pages, the guide writer provides a breakdown of the material by month and year. When applicable, the guide writer lists, in brackets under the classification number, major subjects that are covered throughout all of the months. The guide writer may list additional major subjects but only under the particular month and year in which they appear.

LexisNexis has filmed these documents as they are filed at the National Archives. In some instances, there are documents that appear to have been misclassified by the State Department. In these instances, the guide writer has included in brackets corrected decimal entries. In addition, misfiled decimal number documents have also been included in brackets.

The four-digit number on the far left represents the frame number at which a particular decimal classification begins.
