DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE

Mescalero Indian Agency,
Mescalero, New Mexico,
May 17, 1916.

Special Indian Agent in Charge,
Mescalero Agency, Mescalero, New Mexico.

Sir:

In reply to your inquiry as to what measures have been taken to care for babies and mothers as outlined in Office Circular of January 10, 1916, I will say that it has been the practice at this agency to carry out those suggestions as far as possible, in as much as mothers are instructed in the proper care of themselves and their babies whenever opportunity affords.

Special attention and encouragement are given those who seek aid and those who do not seek it are given advice with as little offense as possible. When artificial feeding is required they are provided with milk, either from the school supply, with malted milk from the drug stock, or advised in the use of condensed milk. Mothers are provided with suitable rations when necessary and it can be shown they are not able to procure them otherwise. Living in tepees as many of them do they are not always able or willing to protect their children from flies, however, they are gradually being brought to the use of mosquito netting which is a great protection to the little ones, especially during sleep. INTRODUCTION

With the change from the nomadic life to the more sedentary life of the reservation, health problems of the Indian population became more acute. The first recognition of the need of medical attention to the Indian was an appropriation of $12,000 made May 5, 1832, for purchasing "genuine vaccine matter" and employing physicians to administer it. The Treaty of 1836 with the Ottawas and Chippewas provided for the payment by the federal government of $300 a year for "vaccine matter, medicines, and the services of physicians, to be continued while the Indians remain on their reservations." Later treaties with other tribes also provided for physicians and in some cases for hospitals. It is difficult to determine the extent to which medical work was carried on or its character; early reports from Indian agents contained a few reports from physicians at various agencies, but no general discussion of medical problems.

By 1880, the number of physicians employed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) was seventy-seven, with four hospitals. In 1890, physicians and nurses were placed in the classified civil service and applicants were required to pass an examination in addition to being graduates from a reputable medical college. There was, however, no professional supervision of agency physicians and nurses and the efficiency of their work depended entirely on the character of the individual.

It was not until the first decade of the twentieth century that medical work was regarded as one of the major activities of the Indian Service. Under regulations issued by the BIA, agency physicians treated sickness, reported on health and sanitary conditions, and served as "civilizing agents to counter the influence of the Indian medicine men." But the commissioners of Indian affairs, whose annual reports included sections on all sorts of topics of special concern, found little occasion to devote any space to health until 1904, when Indian Commissioner William A. Jones reported the results of a survey of Indian health, and then, in 1908, when Indian Commissioner Francis E. Leupp wrote a section entitled "Fighting the White Plague." From this time on, health was a regular and prominent topic in the Indian commissioner's annual reports (these annual reports are not included in this publication). With the recognition of the importance of health and medical issues came the appointment of a medical supervisor for the entire service in 1909 and gradual increases in appropriations in the following years, to "relieve distress and to provide for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases." The systematic organization of the BIA's health work really dates from this time.

The years between the substantial 1912 appropriations and President William Howard Taft's special congressional message on Indian health, and the establishment of a separate Medical Division in 1924, saw the increase in the federal government's extension of paternalistic activity into health and medical matters. The objectives of the Indian health program during this time were devoted to the prevention and cure of disease. Medical and dental services were provided to Indians in hospitals, in sanatoria, and by traveling physicians. But for all this effort, Indian health continued to lag very far behind the white population.

Following the agitation of John Collier, other Indian reformers, and public concerns, the Medical Division was reorganized in 1926, in cooperation with the Public Health Service, which detailed one of its physicians to serve as chief medical director. Four districts were established, each under a district medical director. Physicians and nurses were assigned to specific agencies, schools, and hospitals. Contract physicians continued to be employed, but certain standards were established.

Even following this reorganization of the BIA, continued “harmful attacks and propaganda” created a false impression that the government neglected Indian welfare. In response to his critics, Commissioner of Indian Affairs Burke sanctioned a comprehensive general survey of Indian affairs. The publication of the Meriam Report in 1928 offered a lengthy analysis of the problems in Indian health. While critical of the performance of the BIA, the report placed most of the responsibility for poor health conditions on Congress for refusing to appropriate adequate funds.

The early 1930s saw the extension of President Herbert Hoover’s New Era to the Indian, but the legacy of years of neglect could not be immediately stopped. It took the altruism and “hands on” experience of former Indian reformer and Indian Commissioner John Collier’s Indian New Deal to stem the tide of health degradation on the reservation. While advances were made in the eradication of various infectious diseases, increases in food supply, and construction of suitable housing and sanitary facilities, Indian health conditions continued to be below white standards—those designated by the Public Health Service.

The status of Indian health and health services throughout the early twentieth century (and even to the present day) continued to exhibit the dichotomy that had been manifested ever since the beginning of active concern for Indian health. On the one hand, there was progress in the eradication of diseases among Indians and growth in health facilities and their use by Indians. But on the other hand, there was the disquieting lag of Indian health behind that of the white population. The realization of the necessity for improving Indian health is manifested in this congressional statement:

“The most basic human right must be the right to enjoy decent health. Certainly, any effort to fulfill federal responsibilities to the Indian people must begin with the provision of health services. In fact, health services must be the cornerstone upon which rest all other federal programs for the benefit of Indians. Without a proper health status, the Indian people will be unable to avail themselves of the many economic, educational, and social programs already directed to them....”

Reports of Agency Physicians, Chief Medical Supervisors, Medical Directors, and Supervisory Nurses

This microfilm publication consists of various types of reports, memoranda, and correspondence from agency physicians, medical directors, and supervisory nurses. These reports were submitted to the Washington headquarters and filed in the Central Classified Files under the heading Health and Social Relations, decimal number 700 General. Following the establishment of the chief and district medical directors, these files were assigned their own decimal number—770; supervisory nurses’ reports are filed under the decimal number 771. These reports highlight the health and medical activities at the various agencies, reservations, schools, and hospitals. They consist primarily of narrative and statistical data on the number of hospital patients; medical and surgical services; medical work done outside of hospitals and dispensaries; efforts to alleviate the problem of trachoma, tuberculosis, and venereal disease; dental work; prevention activities; efforts to alleviate unsanitary conditions in the home and at Indian and missionary schools; and efforts in support of public health projects.

Prior to the establishment of a separate medical service in 1924, agency physicians and medical supervisors submitted reports to the agency superintendent. These reports were then forwarded to Washington, of course with annotations by the superintendent. Indian Field Service inspectors generally sent their reports directly to Washington and were usually more critical of conditions. All of these reports provided both statistical data and narrative on topics such as population; vital statistics; diseases; status of hospitals, including patients and equipment; school health conditions; personnel deficiencies; sanitation; and safe water supplies.

The chief medical director supervised all medical, dental, hospital, and sanatorium activities and also acted as the chief medical adviser to the commissioner of Indian affairs. His reports consisted primarily of perspectives on general Indian health policy, interrelationships between the Medical Service and the Public Health Service, and analysis of data from the district medical directors and supervisory nurses for use in the commissioner's annual reports. This micropublication consists of very few of these reports.

The district medical director's duties were generally investigatory and advisory in nature. Specifically, he was responsible for inspecting Indian schools, hospitals, sanatoria, and agency health activities; studying and reporting on standardization of methods and facilities, including personnel; coordinating Indian Service medical and sanitary activities; special investigations of controversial medical techniques and influence of Indian "medicine men"; reporting on matters affecting the Indian Medical Service and public health policies; and promoting cordial relations with state and local sanitary authorities and other public health organizations. The district medical director's reports provide in-depth information on a variety of topics: sanitation; medical resources and pharmaceuticals; requests for funding of hospitals, building of septic systems and toilet facilities, etc.; housing food supply; prevalent diseases; personnel; school conditions; and so on. In addition to the quantity of agency physician and medical supervisors' reports, the largest concentration of reports are from the district medical directors. (Most of the reports in this collection were compiled between 1915 and 1935, with a heavy concentration in the 1920s.)

The supervisory nurses' reports highlight the activities of several types of nurses—field matrons/practical nurses, hospital nurses, and public health or field nurses. Generally, duties consisted of assisting in medical, sanitary, and welfare work under the direction of physicians assigned to particular agencies, schools, or hospitals. These reports provide narrative and statistical data on sanitation, home hygiene, field matron activities, demonstration activities, child birthing, and supervision of the Trachoma and "Save the Babies" campaigns.

In addition to the reports cited above, this edition includes correspondence and memoranda relating to a variety of medical issues. There are small amounts of information on the "Save the Babies" and Trachoma campaigns, new surgical procedures for alleviating trachoma, purchase of lands for use in building medical facilities and securing water supplies, school health situations, and other topics.

These additional records provide the researcher with a glimpse into the subsequent parts of this collection.

This collection provides researchers with a window into federal-Indian health relations. Documentation in this microform collection outlines the promulgation, implementation, and effectiveness of Indian health efforts and policies throughout the 1907–1939 period. The reports in this collection will stimulate the researcher to look more deeply into the problem of Indian health, specifically why Indian health was (and continues to remain) deficient in comparison with the white population.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

General Records, 1907–1939

From 1824 to 1907, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) kept its basic records in separate series of incoming and outgoing letters. The subjects of the correspondence reflected the full range of civilian federal Indian administration and to some extent military matters, although in almost every subject area certain records were segregated from the main series of correspondence into Special Files. During this period the BIA followed the War Department recordkeeping practice of copying letters in letterbooks and of registering and filing incoming letters for each year in alphabetical groups by the initial letter of the surname of the writer. During the 1880s a new registry system was instituted, but by 1906, this system proved unwieldy due to the volume of correspondence from tribes, agencies, schools, individual Indians, missionaries, and reformers.

The BIA discontinued the practice of maintaining separate series of incoming and outgoing correspondence in August 1907. Thereafter correspondence was filed according to a decimal-subject classification system. File numbers, however, continued to be assigned to letters in order of receipt. In addition, letters were assigned to a particular subject classification and to a jurisdiction. The jurisdictions were mainly the field units of the bureau: agencies, schools, institutions, hospitals, sanitarium, and warehouses. There was also an "Indian Office" designation for records relating to the operation of the BIA's central office and a "General Service" designation for general administrative records not relating to any particular jurisdiction. In addition, there were separate designations for tribes, geographical areas, and a few special topics (i.e., liquor traffic). This classification scheme allowed for the expeditious handling of the influx of documentation from both the jurisdictions and the tribes/tribal governments. This scheme consists of a number of subject headings. Each heading is subdivided further by specific topics or aspects of the main subject heading.

Copies of letters sent and received in reply, and any other records relating to the same specific subject as the first or "base" letter received, were filed with that letter; all this material was fastened together to form a "dossier" or, as it was usually called by the bureau, a "flat file." In these files were also placed reports, memos, minutes, leases, contracts, authorities, affidavits, applications, certificates, licenses, permits, bonds, wills, tables, circulars, photographs, and other kinds of documents that formerly had been segregated from the correspondence. This provided for a "complete" record of a particular action, decision, or problem. The Central Classified Files is the progeny of this type of recordkeeping.

Central Classified Files

The Central Classified Files span the years 1907 to 1939 and include letters received, copies of letters sent, reports, memoranda, minutes, petitions, leases, contracts, affidavits, applications, certificates, licenses, permits, bonds, wills, other legal documents, tables, circulars, accounting records, clippings, photographs, diagrams, and blueprints. These records are grouped into records relating to the central office of the BIA; general administrative records; and records relating to the individual field units of the bureau, arranged alphabetically by name of jurisdiction. The records for each jurisdiction are arranged according to a decimal-subject classification system. Within each decimal-subject classification there are individual dossiers or files of records relating to a specific subject. These files are arranged chronologically and thereunder by file number of the first or "base" letter filed therein. The individual documents within a file are generally arranged in chronological order.

SOURCE NOTE

The documents reproduced in this publication are among the Records of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Record Group 75, at the National Archives and Records Administration, Washington, D.C. These papers were filmed from Entry 121, Central Classified Files, 1907–1939, decimal numbers 700, 760, 761, 770, and 771.

EDITORIAL NOTE

These files were the actual working files of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and thus were “rifled through”—material was added, deleted, charged out, and/or rearranged by office and staff members. The original organization of the files has been retained by the Civil Reference Branch, National Archives, and perpetuated by LexisNexis during microfilming. LexisNexis has microfilmed this collection in its entirety, with the exception of exact duplicate documents. Generally the file folders are chronologically arranged. The contents of the file folders are generally arranged in reverse chronological order, but there are exceptions in large correspondence files. There are a small number of file folders whose contents are arranged in straight chronological order.

LexisNexis has selected and microfilmed documentation from the list of tribes, agencies, and reservations on page xvii. Documents in this collection have been arranged according to the decimal-subject classification system used in the Central Classified Files and consist of two discrete decimal series. The first decimal series includes only the decimal number 700—which refers to General Health and Social Relations. The second decimal series includes the numbers 760 through 771 subdivisions. These subdivisions include 760—Clinical Surveys and Research; 761—Medical/Health Meetings, Conferences, and Training; 770—Reports of Medical Directors; and 771—Reports of Supervisory Nurses. This collection includes the documentation exchanged between various tribes, agencies, jurisdictions, and the bureau.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microfilm publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the subject begins. Hence, 6: 0323 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0323 of Reel 6. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.
