INTRODUCTION

People's Republic of China (PRC)

The emergence of Communist China by the end of 1949 was among the most momentous of postwar events. The accession to power by the Communists was the final episode in the long civil war with the Nationalists that had been going on since 1927. Chinese Communist leader Mao Tse-tung and his lieutenants proceeded to consolidate control in the new Chinese People's Republic. Chairman Mao guided the new state with a tight grip on party and government. It seemed that for the first time since the Chinese Revolution of 1911, a unified central government controlled all of China. While the Chinese Communists were a small group of Marxist-Leninist revolutionaries, exercising supreme power over the submissive Chinese masses, they were not alien to the Chinese cultural tradition. They continued a familiar pattern of bureaucratic despotism in government, they were articulate spokesmen of a universal hostility to Western imperialism, and they were the legatees of an ancient tradition of Chinese political and cultural preeminence in East Asia.

The Chinese Communists emulated the Russian experience but added innovations peculiar to the Orient. They promulgated a Soviet-type constitution and parallel structure of government and party; manipulated information for indoctrination purposes; created a secret police; conducted mass arrests, detentions, and assassinations of opponents of all political persuasions; and purged the party in "rectification drives" (the Cultural Revolution was the most prominent). The Mao government even went through a stage of "de-Stalinization" where in a sort of confession, the Communists admitted to excesses between 1949 and 1957. This period of "self-criticism" by the state was followed by renewed oppression in the form of the "Great Leap Forward."

The Communist leaders mobilized the nation in a vast economic development program designed to transform Communist China into an industrial power. They inaugurated a vast land redistribution program and collectivization. Through five-year plans, the industrial goals set by the government were met and, by the early 1960s, exceeded. But there was a considerable lag in agricultural production. The "Great Leap Forward" program was initiated to sustain industrial growth and to revolutionize agricultural production by the mass mobilization of the countryside. The hoped-for self-sufficient “people’s communes” would be responsible for agricultural mechanization and improvement, local industrialization, and other social and economic functions. The primary goal of the commune was to utilize local labor and resources to raise overall production. By the early 1960s, however, crop failures, natural disasters, and a recalcitrant peasantry, which had learned over the centuries to reject external compulsion, forced the government to acknowledge the failure of the agricultural “Great Leap Forward.”

The Communists transformed Chinese life in many ways. Road, rail, and air transportation physically unified the country for the first time. Significant efforts were made to improve public health and sanitation and to combat illiteracy (including a simplification of Chinese characters), women were accepted equally in many professions, and child marriage and concubinage were outlawed. It seemed that the Communists were refashioning the habits and ethos of an entire population. The seeds of the Great Cultural Revolution had been planted and were being cultivated.

The Communist regime followed an active, aggressive foreign policy. They occupied and later subdued a restless Tibet; intervened in Korea; disputed the border with India, which led to open conflict in 1962; and hurled polemics at the USSR over ideology and representation of the “oppressed masses.” This souring of relations with the USSR led to an increase in border disputes and the creation of a third superpower.

Foremost in the Chinese Communist mind was a deep-seated resentment of the United States. Their most vitriolic propaganda sprang from the persistent U.S. refusal to recognize Communist China; continuous efforts to block them from securing representation in the United Nations (UN); and continued military, economic, and political aid to the Nationalist government on Taiwan and the offshore islands.

The Communist Chinese relied on the USSR for assistance early in the life of the PRC. But the growing ideological interpretation of Marxism-Leninism led to an eventual split, with Communist China declaring that Nikita Khrushchev’s Russia was capitulating to the appeasement-like coexistence doctrine of the West. By the early 1960s, the Sino-Soviet split significantly weakened the international Communist movement. This friction reflected not only ideological and political rivalry—competition for the allegiance of the Communist world—but also territorial conflict in the third world. Chinese Communist propaganda openly pressed their claim to leadership of the “nonwhite peoples” in Asia and Africa. This claim appealed to many of the former colonial possessions of Western countries, and the USSR was pictured as another “western” colonial power in Chinese propaganda. With the emergence of China as a new center of Communist power, Moscow no longer exerted the ideological monopoly it had once enjoyed.

Much of the documentation in this collection revolves around the PRC. Reports on economic and living conditions, political affairs, industrial and financial growth, Communist polemics, and examples of aggressive foreign policy abound in this collection. These files make available important material on the germination and growth of the Sino-Soviet rivalry and the application of the Chinese revolutionary zeal to various third world countries, particularly Algeria, Cuba, central Africa, Indonesia, and southeast Asia.

Republic of China (ROC)

During the 1950s and 1960s the Nationalist government considered itself only temporarily superimposed upon Taiwan and maintained a posture of militant readiness for a “counterattack” to recover the mainland. Political and economic life on Taiwan reflected the psychology of “rulers in exile,” who were proudly determined not to give up claims that sustained their hopes and sense of historical consistency. As a consequence, the Nationalist government continued to devote itself in large part to military preparations for recovery of the mainland rather than concentrating its energies on economic, financial, and industrial development. In this “garrison mentality” under martial law—the tradition of Chiang Kai-shek—leadership died slowly.

Upon the evacuation of the Nationalists to Taiwan, the indigenous Taiwanese suffered many indignities, provoking widespread demonstrations that led to greater oppression. As time passed, the local population began to function within the Nationalist framework (but only as high as the provincial level), increased its influence in agriculture and trade, and participated more in the general economic direction of the island. An election process gradually developed, with the Taiwanese becoming the majority in local government, while the Nationalists continued to run the national government.

Economic growth was assisted by U.S. aid, both military and economic. Agricultural reforms were the first to benefit. Land reform and the establishment of American-type cooperatives led to a transition from dependency on exports of sugar and rice to broad self-sufficiency farming. Nationalist rural development programs set an example for other Asian countries embarking on the path to self-sufficiency.

Industrialization of the island brought about a complete reorientation of economic and financial matters, leading again to self-sufficiency. Development proceeded within a general framework of government domination. U.S. assistance fostered growth through investment programs and was so successful that by the mid-1960s, industrialization continued without outside assistance. Japanese investment spurred even greater diversification of industry by the late 1960s.

U.S. assistance—economic, financial, and military—continued throughout the 1950s and 1960s. But the American attitude toward the allegedly corrupt Nationalist government was not always supportive. Through the efforts of the China Lobby, the Chinese Communist invasion of Korea and the spread of communism in Asia led to a reappraisal of the Taiwan “outpost.” With the acceptance of the Pacific Rim Defense System, responsibility for the maintenance of Taiwan grew in importance. An American military mission assisted in the application of a military aid program, the Seventh Fleet patrolled the Straits of Formosa for most of the 1950s and early 1960s (until the Vietnam War), and a mutual defense treaty assured the Nationalists of independence.

By the early 1960s, the threat of Communist Chinese invasion was ebbing. The Sino-Soviet rivalry and third world incursions were taking precedence. The United States continued to oppose UN recognition of Communist China in place of the Nationalists, to promote support of Taiwan as the voice of a democratic China (including demanding domestic political reforms for a greater popular voice in the Nationalist government), and to build up the Nationalist military forces.

During this period, the United States supported periodic talks with Chinese Communist representatives, much to the chagrin and concern of the Nationalists, over a variety of third world issues. These talks, beginning after the 1955 Bandung Conference, led to eventual Chinese Communist acceptance of the peaceful coexistence principle. These talks were suspended during the height of the Vietnam War.

Documents representing ROC issues consume many files in the Internal Affairs section. These files provide an in-depth look into U.S.–ROC trials and tribulations following the Quemoy crisis; the reappraisal of relations with the Nationalists, including Nationalist fears that the United States would abandon them and adopt a “two Chinas” policy; U.S. attention to strengthening the Communist containment policy; and the efforts of Western allies to effect U.S. recognition of Communist China.

Social, economic, agricultural, and industrial materials document the assimilation of the Nationalists and the indigenous population, the growth of Taiwan as an economic power in Asia, and the effects of U.S. aid. But the political documentation is by far the most interesting. The files outline the development of a democratic, popularly representative government, at first locally. While Chiang Kai-shek and his clique retained ultimate power, through popular elections and the growth of provincial governments, the popular assembly became an important counterweight. Correspondence, public opinion polls, and statements by Nationalist/Taiwanese political and popular figures and State Department officials stress the desire to differentiate between the one-man rules of Mao Tse-tung and Chiang Kai-shek, present a picture of political stability, and evaluate the possible U.S. policy of “two Chinas.”

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Confidential U.S. State Department Central Files, 1960–January 1963

The U.S. State Department Central Files are the definitive source of American diplomatic reporting on political, military, social, and economic developments throughout the world in the twentieth century. Surpassing the scope of the State Department's Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS) series, the Central Files provide extensive coverage of all political, military, social, and economic matters relating to a particular country and/or world event.

The State Department Central Files for 1960–January 1963 cover a crucial period in U.S. and world history. Each part of the 1960–January 1963 series contains a wide range of primary materials: special reports and observations on political and military affairs; studies and statistics on socioeconomic matters; interviews and minutes of meetings with U.S. and foreign government officials and leaders; legal and claims documentation; full texts of important letters and cables sent and received by U.S. diplomats and embassy personnel; reports, news clippings, and translations from journals and newspapers; and countless high-level/head of state government documents, including speeches, memoranda, official reports, aide-mémoire, and transcripts of political meetings and assemblies.

In addition, these records offer new insights into the evolution of American foreign policy toward both allies and adversaries and into the shaping of the policies of these countries toward the United States. Of even greater importance for the study of individual countries is the comprehensive manner in which the Central Files illuminate the internal affairs of foreign countries. There are thousands of pages arranged topically and chronologically on crucial subjects: political parties, unrest and revolution, human rights, government administration, fiscal and monetary issues, labor, housing, police and crime, public health and works, national defense, military equipment and supplies, foreign policy making, wars and alliances, education, religion, culture, trade, industry, and natural resources. On these subjects and more, the Central Files offer authoritative, in-depth, and timely documentation and analysis.

All available original documents have been microfilmed.

ORGANIZATION OF THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE DECIMAL FILING SYSTEM

From 1910 to 1963 the Department of State used a decimal classification system to organize its Central Files. This system assembled and arranged individual documents according to their subject, with each subject having a specific decimal code. The decimal system from 1950 to January 1963 consists of ten primary classifications numbered 0 through 9, each covering a broad subject area.

CLASS 0: Miscellaneous.

CLASS 1: Administration of the United States Government.

CLASS 2: Protection of Interests (Persons and Property).

CLASS 3: International Conferences, Congresses, Meetings, and Organizations.

CLASS 4: International Trade and Commerce. Trade Relations. Customs Administration.

CLASS 5: International Informational and Educational Relations. Cultural Affairs. Psychological Warfare.

CLASS 6: International Political Relations. Bilateral Treaties.

CLASS 7: Internal Political and National Defense Affairs.

CLASS 8: Internal Economic, Industrial, and Social Affairs.

CLASS 9: Other Internal Affairs. Communications. Transportation. Science.

Internal Affairs

For this section of the U.S. State Department Central Files, University Publications of America (UPA) has microfilmed the documents contained in Classes 7, 8, and 9. Within these classes, each subject is defined by a decimal file number. The decimal file number is followed by a slant mark (/). The number after the slant mark (/) refers to the date on which the document was generated. Documents within each decimal file number are arranged in chronological order. The entire decimal file number is stamped on the right side of the first page of every document.

These classes are concerned almost exclusively with the internal matters of individual countries. The class number (7, 8, or 9) is followed by the country number. The number following the decimal point indicates subtopics within the major classifications. The date after the slant mark (/) identifies the individual document.

In a small number of instances, documents were assigned erroneous or incomplete decimal numbers. UPA has included, in brackets, corrected decimal entries. In addition, misfiled decimal number documents have also been included in brackets.

CLASS 7. Example, 793.13/7-162

793.13/7-162 indicates a document dated July 1, 1962, relating to the cabinet of the executive branch of government (13) in China (93).

CLASS 8. Example, 893.01/1-460

893.01/1-460 indicates a document dated January 4, 1960, relating to the cost of living (01) in China (93).

CLASS 9. Example, 993.50/4-1161

993.50/4-1161 indicates a document dated April 11, 1961, relating to television (50) in China (93).

Note: For the convenience of the researcher, wherever the pages represented by a specific classification number total more than one hundred, a breakdown of the material by month and year is provided. When applicable, major subjects have been included with the month and year breakdown.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the subject begins. Hence, 5: 0625 directs the researcher to frame 0625 of Reel 5. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial segment of this guide, the researcher will find topics arranged in the order in which they appear on the film. This index uses the terminology and spellings used in the original documents. In order to avoid confusion, the term "Foreign relations" has been substituted for the State Department's term "Political relations." Researchers should consult the acronym list on page xxvii.
