SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The John F. Kennedy National Security Files, 1961–1963, USSR and Eastern Europe, First Supplement, consists of documents on political, diplomatic, economic, and social developments concerning the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) and, to a lesser extent, Eastern Europe. The files are organized alphabetically by country and chronologically within each country. The collection contains cables, letters, and reports from diplomatic personnel; memoranda and analyses from the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the State Department; transcripts of speeches; and political/economic assessments.

Most of the collection contains files on the Soviet Union. The collection begins with documents on the diplomatic relations between the new Kennedy administration and the Soviet government. When Kennedy took office, the United States and the Soviet Union were in the midst of the cold war. One subject continuously present in this collection is the state of relations between the two nations. The collection includes analyses and updates by the U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, Foy Kohler; Secretary of State Dean Rusk; Undersecretary of State George Ball; U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Llewellyn Thompson; and adviser on national security Walt Whitman Rostow. In addition, this collection documents conversations with Soviet officials such as Minister of Foreign Affairs Andrei Gromyko and Soviet Ambassador to the United States Anatoly Dobrynin, as well as speeches delivered by Nikita Khrushchev.

Many issues created tension between the United States and the Soviet Union during this period, and predominant in this collection of National Security Files is the Berlin crisis. In August 1961, the Soviet government began the construction of the Berlin Wall to prevent mass emigration from East Germany to West Germany. The National Security Files contain many cables from the U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union about discussions with Soviet officials over an agreement on the status of Berlin. Furthermore, State Department officials provide analyses and reports on the potential agreement points on the Berlin issue.

Another important issue covered in the National Security Files is the relationship between the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China (PRC). The Soviet Union and the PRC had been friendly since the Communist Revolution in China in 1949 that brought Mao Zedong to power. The two Communist nations worked together to advance the Communist movement throughout the 1950s. In 1956, however, relations between the Soviet Union and the PRC started to deteriorate. At the 20th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Nikita Khrushchev delivered a speech denouncing Joseph Stalin and his "cult of personality." The Chinese became very agitated at what they believed was an attack on Marxism-Leninism. Mao Zedong believed that Khrushchev was betraying the principles of communism. Furthermore, Khrushchev supported a policy of "peaceful coexistence" with non-Communist nations. In other words, Communist nations could live peacefully with capitalist nations and avoid war. This was in contradiction to the Marxist idea of the inevitability of confrontation with capitalism. In the eyes of the Chinese, Khrushchev was being “soft” concerning relations with the West, as the United States was seen as the most hated enemy of communism.

In the ensuing years, the Soviet Union and the PRC engaged in propaganda attacks on one another. Relations between the two Communist nations were very strained in the early 1960s, as reflected in these National Security Files. The collection contains many documents from State Department officials, the CIA, and ambassadors analyzing the causes of the Sino-Soviet conflict, potential developments, and implications for the United States. This collection also includes letters from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union to the Chinese Communist Party and vice versa, which contain the propaganda attacks that were exchanged between the Soviet Union and the PRC.

A third major issue during the Kennedy administration was the Cuban missile crisis, which had profound implications for the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union moved nuclear weapons into Cuba, resulting in a period of tension that came closer to nuclear war than ever before. This collection of documents has files on the correspondence between Soviet and U.S. officials during and after the crisis. The collection contains many analyses of the implications of the Cuban missile crisis for U.S.-USSR relations.

As a result of the threat of nuclear war, the United States and the Soviet Union attempted to improve relations to avoid a second nuclear encounter. Talks of nuclear disarmament and prevention of nuclear proliferation were significant occurrences during this period. The two nations attempted to agree on a nonaggression pact and a ban on the testing of nuclear weapons. Officials from both governments met with relative success in signing the Partial Test Ban Treaty of 1963, which banned the detonation of nuclear weapons in the atmosphere, in outer space, or underwater. This collection of National Security Files contains related cables and letters from ambassadors and State Department officials, analyses from the CIA, and transcripts of speeches by Khrushchev and other Soviet officials.

Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union were also important in relation to the treatment of so-called third world nations. It was the policy of the Kennedy administration to continue the advancement of the Truman Doctrine, the containment of the spread of communism. Thus U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia became an important location of interaction between the United States and the USSR. Analyses and reports on the situations in Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam reflect the thoughts and assessments of U.S. officials on U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia in relation to the spread of communism.

These National Security Files also contain analyses and evaluations of the military and economic capabilities of both the United States and the Soviet Union. The collection includes many CIA analyses comparing the military capabilities of the Soviet Union to those of the United States, as well as the state of their economies. In counterpoint, the collection includes speeches by Khrushchev praising the military and economic power of the Soviet Union. This collection further addresses U.S.-USSR trade relations during the Kennedy administration. The documents include analyses of potential positive and negative results from selling grain and agricultural products to the USSR.

In addition to the files on the Soviet Union, this collection of National Security Files contains documents on relations with other nations in Eastern Europe. Documents on Albania, for example, illustrate the role that country played in the Sino-Soviet conflict. Documents concerning Bulgaria highlight its disagreement with the United States as exchanged in printed media. Other documents cover the extent to which the United States sent economic assistance to Czechoslovakia. Documents on Hungary include citizens' appeals to the United States for help against Soviet control. Documents on Poland highlight the dispute over the border between Poland and Germany, as well as U.S. agricultural and economic aid. Yugoslavia was also a subject of agricultural and economic aid from the United States, as shown in this collection. Additional documents cover relations between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union.

The years of the Kennedy administration were some of the most significant years of the cold war. U.S. relations with the Soviet Union fluctuated with tensions escalating to the brink of nuclear annihilation. This collection of National Security Files opens the door to the thoughts and assessments of some of the most important figures involved in the relations between the two superpowers of the cold war.

SOURCE NOTE

The documents reproduced in this microfilm publication are donated historical materials from the John F. Kennedy Presidential Papers, National Security Files, Countries, in the custody of the John F. Kennedy Library, Boston, Massachusetts. The donors have dedicated their literary rights to the public.

EDITORIAL NOTE

LexisNexis has microfilmed in their entirety all National Security Files (NSF) "Country Files" documents that were declassified, sanitized, or unclassified as of January 2001 for USSR and Eastern Europe. There are individual documents and folders of documents that remain classified and or unprocessed; LexisNexis has therefore included in this NSF microfilm publication the "Document Withdrawal Sheets" for each folder. These withdrawal sheets itemize documents that have been withdrawn from the folders, due to either national security or privacy restrictions, by the staff of the John F. Kennedy Library. The table of contents lists the various Eastern European countries that are included in this supplement and have available recently declassified and or processed material.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major correspondents in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing correspondence by the person begins. Hence, 6: 0422 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0422 of Reel 6. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microfilm publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the subject begins. Hence, 7: 0198 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0198 of Reel 7. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.
