SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This supplement to Part 1 of Papers of the NAACP documents the main contours of NAACP activity between 1966 and 1970. During this period, the NAACP reaffirmed its commitment to ending racial discrimination in all aspects of American life. Having achieved spectacular successes in the courtroom and the passage of civil rights legislation, particularly the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, beginning in 1966 the NAACP moved to ensure the implementation and enforcement of this crucial legislation. The association was particularly concerned with school desegregation and discrimination by employers and by labor unions. The NAACP also worked for the enactment of legislation in areas not covered by the laws passed in 1964 and 1965. NAACP initiatives against housing discrimination culminated in the inclusion of an open housing provision in the Civil Rights Act of 1968. In addition to its traditional concerns, between 1966 and 1970 the NAACP also faced new challenges. The association struggled to respond to the growing anti-Vietnam War movement, the upstart black power movement, the problems facing African Americans living in urban ghettos, and Nixon administration policies on civil rights and school desegregation.

Minutes of Board of Directors Meetings

The board of directors was the highest policy-making body in the NAACP, and its meeting minutes constitute the central record of activities of the organization. The meetings usually included reports from the executive director, assistant executive director, treasurer, general counsel, branch director, public relations director, Washington bureau director, and the Crisis editor. The board took the meeting as a time to question and assess NAACP policy as well as to make decisions about the future course of the association. For example, at the January 3, 1966, meeting, executive director Roy Wilkins reported that a letter had recently been sent to AFL-CIO president George Meany requesting that another African American member be added to the AFL-CIO's executive council. At that time, A. Philip Randolph was the only African American member of the AFL-CIO's executive council. At the same meeting, the board voted that NAACP branch presidents should resign their branch positions if they were elected to hold political office. At the April 10, 1967, meeting, the association took time to respond to Martin Luther King's April 4, 1967, speech at New York City's Riverside Church in which he criticized U.S. involvement in the war in Vietnam. The NAACP's statement sought to separate the peace movement and the civil rights movement. The statement read, in part: "To attempt to merge the civil rights movement with the peace movement, or to assume that one is dependent on the other, is, in our judgment, a serious tactical mistake." The board of directors also handled a number of important administrative duties, including fund-raising, the certification of new branches, and the adjudication of disputes within branches.

Executive Director's Reports

The reports of the NAACP executive director, Roy Wilkins, were submitted to the board of directors for consideration at the board meetings. The executive director reported on major events affecting the NAACP and the larger black freedom movement. He also reported on his own activities and those of other NAACP officials. The reports are very detailed and reveal the executive director trying to carry out NAACP policies and his involvement in many of the most important events and campaigns of this period. A sampling of some of the topics covered in these reports gives an indication of Wilkins's activities. For example, in January 1966, Wilkins reported that he had attended the funeral of murdered Mississippi civil rights worker Vernon Dahmer, protested the exclusion of Julian Bond from the Georgia legislature, and contacted U.S. senators regarding civil rights legislation and the repeal of section 14-B—the so called “right-to-work” provision—of the Taft-Hartley Act. In April 1966, Wilkins attended a planning meeting for the White House Conference on Civil Rights; spoke at a branch meeting in Troy, New York; contacted Sargent Shriver regarding a community action program run by James Farmer; and wired members of Congress to express his views about rent subsidies. In the summer of 1966, Wilkins was on Capitol Hill testifying before Congress about civil rights legislation. The July/August 1967 report notes that Wilkins had been appointed to the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders. This same report includes the text of a statement made after the riots in Newark and Detroit by Wilkins, Martin Luther King Jr., Whitney M. Young Jr., and A. Philip Randolph. The statement called for an end to the violence as well as a redoubling of efforts to end discrimination in employment, education, housing, and the criminal justice system.

The executive director's reports also include the reports of other NAACP departments, including the Church, Labor, Youth, Public Relations, Membership, and Branch departments. The reports submitted by the Branch Department were frequently the most detailed, providing a quick and pointed overview of NAACP activities on a regional, state, and local level. For example, the July/August 1966 report includes summaries of the Louisiana Summer Project and the South Carolina Agricultural Project. This same report also mentions demonstrations by the NAACP youth council in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; riots in Waukegan, Illinois, and Benton Harbor, Michigan; and voter registration activities in Mississippi, Tennessee, and Maryland. The March 1968 report has reports on housing, employment, voter registration, consumer protection, memberships, and antipoverty programs. The March 1970 report contains a report on the relationship between the United Black Protest Committee and the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, NAACP; a summary of the progress of school desegregation in Darlington County, South Carolina; a report on employment in Memphis, Tennessee; and an update from field director Harvey Britton on Louisiana schools. A listing of the major topics covered in the executive director's reports can be found in the Reel Index of this guide.

Records of Annual Meetings

The main function of the annual business meetings was to elect the board of directors from the list of candidates offered by the nominating committee. The annual meeting was open to the entire NAACP membership, but in practice, only a few hundred members typically attended. This group of annual meeting records is notable because it contains several speeches by Roy Wilkins. In these speeches, Wilkins generally summarized the accomplishments and major issues of the previous year and outlined NAACP plans for the upcoming year. For example, in his 1966 speech, Wilkins addressed the 1965 Watts riot and implementation of civil rights legislation, particularly in the area of school desegregation. In his 1968 speech, Wilkins provided a detailed summary of NAACP programs in employment, education, housing, civil rights legislation, and voter registration. Wilkins's 1970 message to the annual meeting focused on the Nixon administration and the activities of some of the NAACP's approximately seventeen hundred branches. NAACP finances and memberships were also major topics of Wilkins's speeches because it was through membership dues that the NAACP financed much of its activism.

Records of Annual Conventions

The NAACP annual conventions served a number of important functions. Foremost among these was setting the policy and legislative agenda of the association for the ensuing year. This function was carried out primarily through the passing of resolutions, which are, therefore, an important source for understanding NAACP policy. At the conventions from 1966 to 1970, resolutions were passed on topics such as civil rights legislation, antipoverty programs, school desegregation, housing, discrimination by employers and labor unions, riots, the United Farm Workers, home rule for Washington, D.C., the 1968 Olympics, the war in Vietnam, affirmative action programs, and women's rights.

Another important function of the conventions was public relations. To this end, special events such as testimonial banquets and award ceremonies were scheduled. Prominent individuals were invited to address the convention or to submit a written greeting. The file of greetings to the convention is an interesting source for analyzing the political milieu in which the NAACP operated. There are letters from leading politicians, like Lyndon Baines Johnson and Hubert Humphrey; from top labor leaders, including George Meany and Walter P. Reuther; and from leaders of religious organizations and other civil rights organizations.

Speeches by major NAACP leaders and other prominent figures were used both to establish the NAACP's agenda and to provide publicity for the association. The speeches in this edition address many of the most pressing issues facing the NAACP between 1966 and 1970. One of the most important speeches in this period was Roy Wilkins's speech at the 1966 convention, in which he discussed the concept of black power, a concept that had been articulated by Stokely Carmichael on June 17, 1966, at a rally in Greenwood, Mississippi. Wilkins told the convention: "No matter how endlessly they try to explain it, the term 'black power' means anti-white power.... It has to mean separatism." Wilkins continued: "We of the NAACP will have none of this. We have fought it too long." Wilkins's speech was clearly the highlight of the 1966 convention. Correspondence in the 1966 convention greetings file (Reel 3, Frame 0209) and in the Roy Wilkins keynote address file (Reel 4, Frame 0177) contains many letters praising Wilkins's speech, especially his criticism of black power. Other speakers at the 1966 convention included Esther Peterson, Harry Golden, and James E. Jones. The text of their speeches, and Roy Wilkins's keynote address, can be found beginning at Frame 0081 of Reel 4.

Following the urban riots of 1967 and the widespread rioting that occurred after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. on April 4, 1968, the 1968 NAACP convention in Atlantic City focused on the theme of extending NAACP programs to urban ghettos and developing political and economic power in these areas. At the opening session of the convention, NAACP board chairman Stephen Gill Spottswood used his keynote address to reaffirm the NAACP's traditional commitments and to argue that the NAACP continued to be relevant to the hopes and aspirations of the majority of African Americans. Spottswood declared: "We remind America that for 59 years the NAACP has been struggling to remove the strangling inequalities of the ghetto which have stimulated the riots." He continued: "We are for the strengthening of the ghetto but not for the development of the ghetto-state.... We speak for the vast, though little publicized, majority of Negro Americans.... Inclusion is their goal, not exclusion." Other speakers at the 1968 convention offered their perspectives on the challenges facing the NAACP and all African Americans as they sought to remedy the "urban crisis." Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College in Atlanta, Georgia, centered her remarks on the importance of employment. She recognized that the civil rights legislation of the mid-1960s was an important achievement, but she also argued that this legislation had not yet tangibly affected the lives of the majority of African Americans. She argued that employment was the best way to positively impact the lives of the residents of America's central cities. Ruth Harvey of Danville, Virginia, and Julian Bond, a former Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee member and in 1968 a member of the Georgia House of Representatives, both stressed the need for unity among African Americans and the importance of political power.

When the association met in Cincinnati, Ohio, in June 1970 for its sixty-first convention, Richard Nixon had been in the White House for about eighteen months. The NAACP and its allies felt this was long enough to evaluate the Nixon administration and they clearly did not like what they were seeing. Several speakers at the 1970 convention directed pointed critiques at the Nixon administration. The most controversial speech was delivered by Stephen Gill Spottswood, who began with a very brief list of some of the NAACP's accomplishments since it had last met in Cincinnati. He then quickly made his way to the heart of his speech. Spottswood declared: "For the first time since Woodrow Wilson, we have a national administration that can rightly be characterized as anti-Negro. This is the first time since 1920 that the national administration had made it a matter of calculated policy to work against the needs and aspirations of the largest minority of its citizens." Spottswood then listed nine instances of Nixon's "anti-Negro" policies, including efforts to delay school desegregation, the nominations of Clement Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court, attempts to weaken the Voting Rights Act of 1965, and signing of defense contracts with textile companies that had records of employment discrimination. Spottswood also argued that Nixon's policies were giving encouragement to white racists. Other speakers were also critical of the Nixon administration. Leon E. Panetta questioned the administration's policies on school desegregation and NAACP Labor Department head Herbert Hill criticized the Philadelphia Plan.

Not surprisingly, the Nixon administration quickly responded to these speeches. This edition includes a telegram to Roy Wilkins from Leonard Garment, special consultant to Nixon, defending Nixon's policies. Garment argued that the Philadelphia Plan, family food assistance programs, and the naming of African Americans to policy-making positions were among some of the administration's accomplishments. Garment also argued that Spottswood misrepresented Nixon's policies in the areas of employment and school desegregation. Garment's telegram is followed by a reply from Spottswood and several other letters mentioning Spottswood's speech (Reel 10, Frame 0075). The August–September 1970 issue of the Crisis contains excerpts of newspaper reaction to Spottswood's speech and to Herbert Hill's speech on the Philadelphia Plan. This Crisis issue also includes a detailed summary of the 1970 convention.

The 1970 convention was also notable because of another speech by Roy Wilkins. Consistent with the “one society” theme of the convention, Wilkins spoke about his objections to black separatism. Wilkins began by reminding the audience that, since 1909, the NAACP had fought for “achieving ‘the realization of common opportunities for all within in a single society.’” Wilkins argued that integration was the only way for African Americans to achieve equality. Wilkins also indicated that he understood the importance of black culture and black consciousness. He stressed that integration did not translate into a “loss of identity” or a “loss of color distinction” or “the complete burying of a culture.” Wilkins's speech shows the NAACP attempting to respond to the militancy of the late 1960s without abandoning its traditional commitments. The text of Wilkins's speech and the other speeches from the 1970 convention can be found beginning at Frame 0338 of Reel 12.

In addition to establishing the NAACP's agenda and providing publicity for the association, another important function of the conventions was to provide the opportunity for personal communication between the national officers and the NAACP branches. Sometimes complaints about local branches or complaints from local branches about the national administration of the NAACP were aired at the convention. For example, this edition includes a complaint from the Delaware State Conference that they had been “ruthlessly eliminated from participation” in policy-making deliberations. There are two documents from the National Committee to Revitalize the NAACP Movement, an NAACP group from New York State that feared the NAACP was losing “the respect and confidence of the black masses” (Reel 6, Frame 0790). The convention also afforded NAACP branches a degree of input on the national program. Several of the resolutions files in this edition contain suggestions from branch offices. Branch delegates also served on a number of the standing committees governing the operation of the convention, including the Advance Drafting Committee and the Committee on Convention Procedures.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics, personalities, and activities in this microform publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 8: 0429 directs the researcher to the folder that begins at Frame 0429 of Reel 8. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, arranged in the order in which they appear on the film.
