SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This edition of Papers of the American Slave Trade, microfilmed from the holdings of the Newport Historical Society in Rhode Island, reproduces the papers of Aaron Lopez, one of Newport's most successful merchants in the second half of the eighteenth century. The financial records and correspondence in the collection date from 1755 to 1812 and focus on the period from 1760 until Lopez's death in 1782. Lopez was a Portuguese Jew fleeing religious persecution when he came to Rhode Island in 1752. In Newport he reunited with his brother, Moses, and cousin Jacob Rodriguez Rivera. Beginning as a candlemaker in partnership with Rivera, Lopez established a shipping business by the late 1750s, trading with merchants in Boston, Charleston, New York City, London, Amsterdam, Brussels, Lisbon, and the West Indies.

The records in the collection show that Lopez traded in a wide variety of products including spermaceti candles and oil, rum, molasses, sugar, hardware supplies, turpentine, household furnishings, and clothing. By the late 1760s, Lopez had expanded to include trafficking in African slaves. Although Lopez assigned only a small percentage of his ships to the slave trade, researchers can study several important aspects of that trade with this collection. Lopez was a careful businessman who kept detailed financial records and gave specific instructions to the captains of his ships, as captured in the correspondence. In an April 12, 1774, letter from Rivera and Lopez to William English, master of the Ann, the ship owners informed English that "it is needless for us to point out to you the part of the coast you are to trade at" and told him to purchase slaves on the windward coast of Africa and sell them in the West Indies (Reel 15, Frame 0214). In a May 6, 1768, letter to Nathaniel Briggs regarding his journey to Africa in command of the ship Hannah, Lopez warned Briggs not to stay on the coast longer than necessary and to sell the slaves in the West Indies (Reel 20, Frame 0786).

Lopez and other Newport traders tried to limit the time spent on the African coast to minimize the chances of disease outbreak among the slaves and to reduce the overall cost of the voyage. These two facets of the trade are illustrated in a July 15, 1773, letter from ship captain William English in Anomabu, Africa. English alerted Lopez that he had purchased thirty slaves and would depart from Anomabu because he was fearful for the health of the slaves and did not want to expend any more provisions (Reel 18, Frame 0001). Preventing sickness among the slave cargo was essential to a profitable voyage, as indicated in an August 7, 1767, letter to William Stead. Because of an outbreak of disease, Lopez informed Stead, many slaves died en route to St. Kitts, and the captain, Nathaniel Briggs, sold the survivors at a lower than expected price (Reel 1, Frame 0001). Other voyages were more successful. In a May 15, 1774, letter, John Stanton wrote to Stephen Ayrault that he transported forty-seven slaves from Africa to Barbados and lost only two on the passage (Reel 18, Frame 0498). These letters reveal that one of the ways in which Newport merchants attempted to limit sickness within their slave cargos was by using small, fast ships that held around one hundred slaves or fewer. Other documents refer to the sale and prices of slaves in Barbados, Jamaica, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia.

Aaron Lopez originally came to Rhode Island because he could not practice his faith in Portugal, and his life as a Jew is documented to a small degree in this collection. Perhaps the most important document addressing Lopez's religious life is a decision by the Superior Court of Rhode Island regarding the joint petition of Lopez and Isaac Elizer for British citizenship in Rhode Island. The superior court rejected their petition because they were not Christians. (Lopez eventually became a citizen in Massachusetts.) In a letter to Isaac DaCosta in Charleston, South Carolina, Lopez describes the inquisition in Spain and his brother's flight from the country. The account books contain notations for sweet oil for Hanukkah and observation of the Sabbath, and refer to "sedakah" (charitable contributions) given by Lopez to his synagogue. There are also accounts with Isaac Touro, the hazan (official) of the synagogue in Newport.

Merchants and ship captains who dealt with Lopez and are named in the collection include Abraham All, Joshua Almy, Stephen Ayrault, Peleg Barker, Francis Brinley, Christopher Champlin, John Channing, Peleg Clarke, Henry Cruger, William English, Christopher Gonsalves, Charles Handy, Nathaniel Hathaway, Robert Lawton, Henry Lloyd, Abraham Pereira Mendes, Moses Seixas, John Thurston, and Yeates & Cahoone.

Researchers can find other Aaron Lopez materials microfilmed by LexisNexis in Papers of the American Slave Trade, Series A: Selections from the Rhode Island Historical Society, Part 2: Selected Collections, and Series B: Selections from the Newport Historical Society, Part 1: Selected Collections.
