The Financial Times publishes a unique blend of breaking news and analysis of the most important stories in business, finance and politics around the world. It is a leading English-language business newspaper in Europe. This feed consists of articles from all 5 regional editions of the paper including all UK, European, Asia-Pacific and Middle Eastern editions and all articles from FT.com. While the full text is searchable, results will display the headline and the first 140 characters.

Links will take customers from the headline display to the full text article on FT.com, showing a limited number of original articles per month. Users can view the article itself and, to assess how prominent the coverage was, will have the option to view a pdf display showing where the article appeared within the physical newspaper. A direct subscription agreement with the Financial Times must be completed before LexisNexis customers will be permitted access to the full text.

These files are accessible individually and also within a group called FT Headlines. These are available via a search in the Sources tab. Financial Times Headlines contains the most recent 90 days and FT.com Headlines carries an archive from 7 January 2013 to current.
