ASIA PACIFIC LAW REVIEW

The Asia Pacific Law Review (APLR) is published twice per year. The APLR publishes leading articles and commentaries on legal developments in the Asia-Pacific region. Based in Hong Kong, this peer-reviewed publication is essential reading for practitioners, scholars and related professionals interested in understanding the dynamics of Asian legal systems and laws.

The APLR welcomes submissions by scholars and practitioners on matters related to Asian and Pacific law, policy and legal systems. Articles should not normally exceed 10,000 words. Notes and comments are normally 5,000 words.

Submissions to APLR should be original contributions and should not be under consideration for any other publication. Authors of articles, notes and comments are entitled to 25 offprints and a copy of the issue in which their article appears. Each author of a book review will receive a copy of the relevant issue.

Manuscripts should be submitted with both text and endnotes typed and double-spaced. Please send two copies. Submissions should include a file stored on disk. An APLR Style Manual will be sent upon request.

Manuscripts and disks are submitted at the sender's risk and the APLR assumes no responsibility for the return of material. APLR will endeavour to notify authors of its editorial decision as quickly as possible. Copyright in works published by APLR rests with the publisher. A copy of the copyright form is available from the Managing Editor.
