LexisNexis Accelerates Legal Research with Launch of My Lexis

(DAYTON, Ohio, February 24, 2005) - LexisNexis[®] U.S., a leading provider of legal, news and business information services, has launched an easy-to-customize start page called My Lexis[™] to small law firms, corporate counsel, tax professionals, and federal agencies. The new page, a tab on the lexis.com[®] service, helps save valuable research time by allowing users to search multiple sources at once and customize the page with research components.

“With the launch of My Lexis, we’ve made it even easier for our customers to access their favorite research tools and review the results of a comprehensive search,” said Ann Fullenkamp, senior vice president and publisher at LexisNexis. “We envision My Lexis will be the starting point both for experienced users who want to create a custom launching point for research and for new users who need a quick and simple way to jump-start their research.”

Small law firms, corporate counsel, tax professionals, and federal agency lexis.com customers can access the new My Lexis site by choosing the My Lexis tab on the research home page. To view an online demonstration of My Lexis, visit www.lexisnexis.com/mylexispressroom.

The new features of My Lexis include:

Quick Search

This feature allows users to search multiple legal, analytical, and news sources simultaneously. After entering search terms and selecting a jurisdiction or practice area, users can select source types and choose from specific sources to search.

Summarized results set

After searching multiple sources, the results are displayed in a tabbed results set that shows the number of results by source type.

Custom drag and drop search components – components offered will vary by market

My Lexis encourages users to create a custom research section, with the ability to add, remove and re-arrange a selection of LexisNexis research components.
