Lexis Advance®

YOUR FEEDBACK IS IN OUR DNA

Here are the newest Lexis Advance® enhancements requested by customers like you.

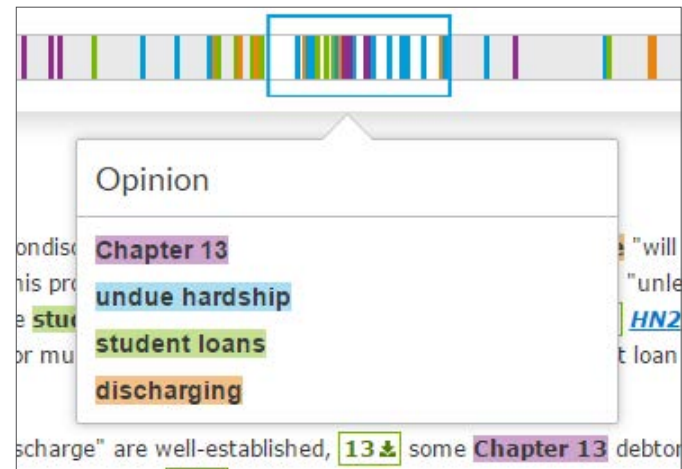

SEPTEMBER/OCTOBER 2016 | New Enhancements

Easier Results Review

Have you seen it yet? Visualize your case law research like never before.

There's nothing else like Lexis Advance® Search Term Maps, a patent-pending innovation to help you assess case relevance at unprecedented speed. Unique color coding for your search terms and phrases lets you spot dense concentrations and patterns of terms throughout case documents right away, even before you review the full text.

Each search term or phrase receives a unique color code and displays on the Search Term Location Bar.

More enhancements to streamline your results review

Resume your research directly from a delivered results list:

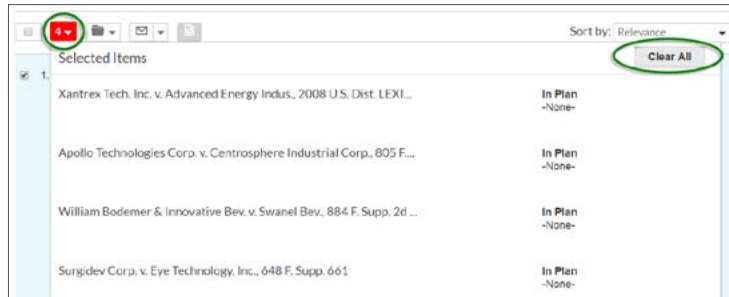

- The cover page of your delivered document contains your search query, linked to the search itself. Click it to re-run your search
- Click any linked document in your delivered results list to go right into the full-text document

Streamline your delivered news and legal news documents.

To exclude the CLASSIFICATION segment and indexing terms from your delivery, select the Exclude option on the Lexis Advance delivery screen.

Better view and manage selected documents for delivery.

Use the new Clear All option in the red Delivery Tray box 50 to reset the document counter.

More Search Power

Find relevant law more easily

Retrieve a search from your History, Work Folders, etc., and the pre-search filters you used with the search will be applied to the retrieved search.

Discover more search command equivalents and updates to search command processing. (Learn more details on searching with special commands and connectors in this . . .) Lexis Advance now:

- Processes proximity connectors W/n, /n, near/n, +n from the smallest to the largest. For example, in the search bankrupt! W/15 discharg! AND student W/5 loan, Lexis Advance operates on student W/5 loan before bankrupt! W/15 discharg!
- Processes the letter “a” as a search term, e.g., when you enter citations
- Finds hyphenated search terms in results with and without the hyphen—for example, African-American and African American both yield results with both spellings

Search segments more easily. Use the LENGTH segment, e.g., ENTER: length>500, in law review, legal news and news sources. And now Lexis Advance recognizes singular and plural segment names equivalently, so judges (smith OR jones) and judge (smith OR jones) return identical results.

Enter a party name search, e.g., Strickland, and your results will now include the short (Strickland v. Washington) and long (Strickland, Superintendent, Florida State Prison, et al. v. Washington) case names automatically.

Added Document Flexibility

Increase efficiency with more convenient viewing and navigation

Lexis Advance now displays the official and parallel reporter pagination simultaneously in full-text cases. Locate passages and determine pinpoint cites for any reporter easily.

Opinion

[*439] [704] [1609] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN ▼ delivered the opinion of the Court.

The cases before us raise questions which go to the roots of our concepts of American criminal jurisprudence consistent with the Federal Constitution in prosecuting individuals for crime. More specifically, we deal with the question of whether it is constitutionally permissible for a State to require a confession from an individual who is subjected to custodial police interrogation and the necessity for procedures which assure that the privilege under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution not to be compelled to incriminate himself is preserved.

[*440] We dealt with certain phases of this problem recently in Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478 (1964). In that case, four cases before us, law enforcement officials took the defendant into custody and interrogated him without giving him a confession. The police did not effectively advise him of his right to remain silent or of his right to confer with an attorney before being questioned. When the police confronted him with an alleged accomplice who accused him of having perpetrated a murder. When the police said, "I didn't shoot Manuel, you did it," they handcuffed him and took him to an interrogation room. There he was questioned for four hours until he confessed. During this interrogation, the police denied his request to have his retained attorney, who had come to the police station, from consulting with him. At his trial, the police introduced his confession against him. We held that the statements thus made were constitutionally inadmissible.

This case has been the subject of judicial interpretation and spirited legal debate since it was decided. The various courts in assessing its implications, have arrived at varying conclusions. [*9] [1] A wealth of scholarly articles and commentaries have examined its ramifications and underpinnings. [2] [*10] Police and prosecutor [*41] have speculated on the implications of this case. [*11] certiorari in these cases, 382 U.S. 924, 925, 937, [*705] in order further to explore the implications of applying the privilege against self-incrimination to in-custody interrogation, and to give [*42] con

Due to the nature of the origin of public record information, the public records and commercially available data sources used in reports may contain errors. Source data is sometimes reported or entered inaccurately, processed poorly or incorrectly, and is generally not free from defect. This product or service aggregates and reports data, as provided by the public records and commercially available data sources, and is not the source of the data, nor is it a comprehensive compilation of the data. Before relying on any data, it should be independently verified. For Secretary of State documents, the data is for information purposes only and is not an official record. Certified copies may be obtained from that individual state's Department of State. The LexisNexis SmartLinx report will be provided within certain search and privacy parameters and is subject to LexisNexis General Terms and Conditions located at www.lexisnexis.com/terms/general.aspx.
