INTRODUCTION

Eleanor Roosevelt confronted more than sadness when Franklin Delano Roosevelt died on April 12, 1945. She had to deal with the vast outpouring of condolences from citizens and leaders around the world, the legal intricacies involved in closing her husband's estate, and the imbroglios surrounding the placement and design of a memorial to FDR. She had to assess her own financial health, decide whether or not she should accept a congressional pension, make a home of her own, and decide how she would live her life alone. At the same time, she knew that she was now the symbol of the Roosevelt legacy and would be called upon to represent the policies and hopes associated with the Roosevelt administration.

And perhaps most important, she faced one of the biggest challenges of her political life—how to continue to influence American politics and diplomacy when she no longer had the White House for a platform or a variety of executive branch staff members sympathetic to her viewpoints and predisposed to act upon her requests.

The documents reproduced on the nineteen reels included in this collection reveal how she addressed these often conflicting pressures. These documents are the record Eleanor Roosevelt left to the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and represent her legacy to the nation's archive. The letters, reports, news clippings, articles, memoranda, cards, and telegrams reproduced here provide one of the greatest (albeit incomplete) written records of Eleanor Roosevelt's work and the public reaction to it. They show us the tremendous amount of requests she received from the general public—for help with financial matters, job placement, and immigration visas; for advice on how to deal with family issues, personal problems, and business opportunities; for recommendations on colleges and professional schools; and heartfelt solicitations for endorsements, contributions, and public statements on a variety of public and private matters. Also included are letters she received from the general public reacting to positions she promoted in her "My Day" columns, aired during interviews, or expressed in speeches.

As the guide to the microfilm details, the correspondence is filed in alphabetical order and arranged chronologically within each folder. If ER responded to correspondence, frequently her correspondence leads the packet, with the incoming material eliciting the correspondence immediately following.

Yet readers should be cautioned that many of Eleanor Roosevelt's responses are missing from this collection. In 1945, the remarkably efficient Malvina ("Tommy") Thompson provided Eleanor Roosevelt's only full-time secretarial assistance. Such a small personal staff, no matter how devoted and resourceful, could not keep track of the huge mountains of material their boss received and generated. Consequently, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. Often the only indication of Eleanor Roosevelt's response to the material are almost illegible notes jotted in the margins or drafts of points she dictated to Thompson that were then placed in the file. Nevertheless, the collection is a rich resource for anyone interested in the early postwar years and how Eleanor Roosevelt responded to the personal and professional challenges 1945, 1946, and 1947 presented her.¹

The same frenzied pace affected the filing of documents. Sometimes material is filed under the name of the author, other times under the name of the organization the author represented. Readers interested in Walter White, for example, should also check files for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Southern Conference on Human Welfare, and other civil rights organizations, as well as the file for Columbia, Tennessee. If Eleanor Roosevelt forwarded the letter to another person or agency and had that letter returned, the document could just as often be filed under the name of the third party who read and returned it. In short, anyone who uses this material must cast a wide net to find all material relevant to their interests.

Eleanor Roosevelt began her “years alone” allocating her husband’s possessions to the Roosevelt Library and distributing specifically willed items to her children and colleagues. As her correspondence with Felix Frankfurter, Esther Lape, Estes Kefauver, and Basil O’Connor details, she tried to balance congressional wishes to commemorate her husband’s legacy against his specific desires for a simple memorial placed outside the National Archives. Her correspondence with Harold Ickes reveals her efforts to support the library and museum, the legal procedures necessary to turn her husband’s family home over to the government, and her reluctance to engage in any grand memorial decisions until the estate had been settled. She debated whether or not to accept a federal pension and how to manage her income with family attorney Henry Hooker.

She also kept a sharp eye on American politics and diplomacy. Her letters to her aunt Maude Gray and Secretary of State Edward Stettinius express her concerns as to how the San Francisco conference, charged with creating the United Nations, handled the seating of delegates, especially those for Poland and Argentina. Letters to Mary McLeod Bethune, W. E. B. Du Bois, and Walter White respond to their proposals suggesting ways the American delegation could address racial discrimination and establish a just protocol for the United Nations Economic and Social Council (UNESCO) to follow. She exchanged letters with Bernard Baruch on matters ranging from the disarmament of Germany to regulation of atomic energy to the financial backing of individual congressional candidates.

Nor did ER limit her concern to the development of the United Nations, Truman’s decisions at Potsdam, and the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. She supported the Freeland League and George Marshall’s efforts on behalf of prisoners of war. When FDR’s correspondence with King Ibn Saud was released, she argued forcefully that the president neither abandoned Jewish desires for a homeland nor engaged in diplomatic duplicity. And as she watched Stalin continue the Soviet advance, correspondence with both famous and average Americans depicted her gradual movement into the cold war camp.

The correspondence in this collection reveals how persistent her attention to domestic politics and policy was.² ER corresponded with labor leaders David Dubinsky, Walter Reuther, and Rose Schneiderman about wage and price controls, strikes and the hardships they imposed on striking workers, inflation, and the Equal Rights Amendment. Her correspondence with Democratic Party leader Ed Flynn detailed her desire to unite completely unattached liberals and Republicans with the state party and also detailed her fierce opposition to third-party candidates at all levels (even in mayoral elections). Her early correspondence with Henry Wallace encouraged him to carry the New Deal's banner in the Truman administration. Her devotion to a Democratic victory is even more detailed in her letter to Robert Hannegan in which she argued that large margins of victory in New York City elections were essential to blocking a Thomas Dewey victory in 1946 and 1948. Her steady comments encouraged allies (Harold Ickes, Sidney Hillman, C. B. Baldwin) to attempt to draft her for a variety of political offices, all of which she firmly refused.

There are dozens of letters to "average citizens" discussing Russian aggression, Spain, Jewish immigration to Palestine, civil rights, and labor issues. In short, by the time Harry Truman appointed ER to the first American delegation to the United Nations in December 1945, she had returned to the political and diplomatic problems she addressed while living in the White House.

The year 1946 presented Eleanor Roosevelt with a new challenge—how to balance her interest in domestic policy and partisan politics with her diplomatic responsibilities to the United Nations. Although she increasingly used her "My Day" column as her political voice on domestic issues, her correspondence with prominent individuals—Bishop William Scarlett on "The Negro Question," Attorney General Tom Clark on conscientious objectors, Chief Swimming Eel on Native American concerns, Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas on labor and housing concerns, and playwright George Bernard Shaw on women's rights—shows how ER worked behind the scenes to mediate political disputes and inform political leaders of the positions she hoped they would adopt. Documentation from Mary McLeod Bethune, Tom Clark, and Walter White traces her strong support for the NAACP's investigation of the race riot in Columbia, Tennessee. But just as important, the 1946 paper trail also documents her involvement (on a variety of levels) with organizations whose values she championed: Bethune-Cookman College, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the NAACP, the President's Commission on Higher Education, the Union for Democratic Action, and the Wiltwyck School, to cite just a few.

ER's correspondence with average citizens increased in 1946. She often replied to citizens who wrote her in urgent tones asking for help, often lending her name to their requests, as she did when she wrote President Truman urging him to meet with E. M. Wallrath whose son (who was stationed in Japan) had been condemned to death for desertion. As responses to Peggie Wingard and General George Van Horn Moseley indicate, sometimes she even responded to bigotry in a temperate, patient manner, believing, perhaps, that the best way to expose her correspondent's irrationality was to address them as if they were rational.

Although the vast majority of documents relating to ER's United Nations work have been filmed for a different part of this series (Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt from the FDR Library on the United Nations, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications, 1945–1952), users will find a rich repository of material to supplement that collection. ER discussed the International Refugee Organization with Ed Flynn, the structure of the United Nations with George Marshall, the need to develop strong popular support for the United Nations with Chester Bowles, and the need to appoint an English-speaking woman to the UN Commission on the Status of Women with Carrie Chapman Catt and Dorothy Kenyon. Indeed, the UN dominates her correspondence with Bernard Baruch as they evaluated Henry Wallace's proposal for regulating the atomic bomb, the Baruch Plan for international control of atomic energy, various proposals to rebuild the German and British economies, and the difficulties James Byrnes presented both to the delegation and the United Nations itself. On a more personal note, her correspondence with Elinor Morgenthau shows ER's initial impression of the senatorial members of the American delegation and her appointment to the Committee on Social, Cultural and Humanitarian Concerns (Committee Three).

Concern for refugees dominates ER's general foreign policy correspondence. She exchanged letters with Jan Masaryk about the issue of restitution for dispossessed Jews and other displaced persons in Czechoslovakia. She asked Ed Flynn to solicit Cardinal Spellman's support (and that of the Roman Catholic Church) for the International Refugee Organization and for the United Nations Emergency Children's Fund. She also wrote Clarence Pickett and others to ask for their support. Although ER disagreed with Lafayette Golestone's Zionist insistence that refugees be granted immediate access to Palestine (arguing that refugees should not be allowed to resettle in Palestine without protection from American and British forces), she argued strongly that substantive material assistance should be given Jewish refugees wherever they were. She criticized Pastor Niemoeller's visit to the United States and responded to numerous critics outraged by her opposition.

Material for 1947 reflects the same attention to domestic politics, social policy, the United Nations, and refugee concerns plus the unease with which ER dealt with both red-baiting and American Communism. She praised Americans for Democratic Action as an anti-Communist liberal organization and defended its policy of excluding Communists from its leadership and staff to C. B. Baldwin, Max Lerner, Fiorello La Guardia, Sumner Welles, and Ada Garfinkel. Yet ER's correspondence with Robert Lovett reveals her strong criticism of the State Department's dismissal, without hearings, of ten employees as "security risks," and her letter to A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, clearly states her opposition to the Taft-Hartley proposals. ER responded to those who supported Henry Wallace, such as Rev. E. Ralph Wiborg, when they wrote challenging her increasing criticism of Wallace. Such public anticommunist positions did not dissuade her critics, as her correspondence with J. Edgar Hoover about Congressman Clarence Brown's alleged accusations against ER illustrates.

Discrimination continued to rankle ER. She told Mrs. Charles McLean of the American Women's Club of Toronto that she would not be able to keep her speaking engagement because she had been told that the organization discriminated against Jews. She wrote Clara Tree Major that she was resigning from the board of advisers to the Children's Theatre because Major refused to allow integrated audiences. ER engaged in painful correspondence with Walter White over the presentation of the NAACP's petition to the United Nations on American race relations. She argued the Equal Rights Amendment with Josephine Terrill, chairman of the National Woman's Party, saying that energy could be better spent on changing laws discriminating against women in each state. And she took the time to answer questions from a high school student, Beatrice Hauser, about what students could do to promote better race relations in their own community.

The foreign policy documents show continuing concern for refugees and increasing concern for the direction American foreign policy took in 1947. Letters to Dean Acheson note ER's dismay that the United States did not consult the United Nations before it responded to the crisis in Greece. She aired her concerns about American economic assistance to Europe, the plans to control atomic energy, American aid to Greece and Turkey, and Soviet obstructionism to Baruch. ER urged Senators Arthur Vandenberg and Tom Connolly to commit to another term on the American delegation to assure bipartisan representation. She lobbied Secretary of State George Marshall for food aid to Yugoslavia and corresponded with Nat Einhorn, executive director of the American Committee for Yugoslav Relief. ER criticized Henry Wallace's speeches in Europe in correspondence with C. B. Baldwin. She discussed the proposal for American-Soviet control of the Ruhr, plans for European recovery, and the protection of religious freedom in the proposed declaration of human rights with John Foster Dulles. ER even confronted Soviet Ambassador Andrei Gromyko, challenging him to provide material supporting accusations he made in committee and before the general assembly. Finally, she addressed the many letters she received proposing world government, telling her various correspondents that nations were not ready to give up the sovereignty necessary for world government to succeed and that the best course for peace was to strengthen the United Nations.

Palestine occupied a great deal of ER's written record. Her correspondence with George Marshall vigorously criticized American policy on Palestine. She exchanged letters with Freda Kirchwey, president of the Nation, and several others that focused on the future of Palestine. ER asked Senators Robert Wagner and Irving Ives to support continued United States aid to European refugees after funding for the United Nations Refugee Relief Administration ended. She asked state department aide George Warren and Gromyko to make inquiries about Raoul Wallenberg on her behalf. ER asked educator Charl Williams to use her influence to get Parent-Teacher Associations in each state to support the admission of displaced persons into the United States and urged Americans from all walks of life to contribute to the United Jewish Appeal to help Jewish survivors of the war in Europe.

By the end of 1947, Eleanor Roosevelt had cemented her position as a formidable leader in her own right on many fronts—as a party leader, diplomat, columnist, champion of human rights, and touchstone of the New Deal. She grew increasingly confident in her own ability to navigate controversy, partisan politics, and Robert's Rules of Order. These documents reflect the various strategies and language she applied in diplomatic, partisan, and private conversations and thus introduce this woman in all her complexity.

Taken together, these materials give one a sense of what ER's life was like as she began life alone; how she grew as a political leader, journalist, activist, and diplomat; and the conflict she encountered as she publicly charted her own course. Readers, however, are cautioned against relying completely on this collection for their interpretation. While it is a complete record of the documents in the General Correspondence files ER donated to the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York, it does not include other major collections housed there, nor does it include all copies of her outgoing correspondence. That material is just now being assembled, and interested parties are encouraged to contact The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers Project at The George Washington University (erpapers@gwu.edu) for assistance in accessing the complete record of ER's activities from 1945 to 1962.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

LexisNexis has filmed The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947, from holdings at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. The majority of the correspondence follows the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt in April 1945. In addition to correspondence, the collection includes reports, newspaper and periodical clippings, research papers, and poetry. The documents are organized by year, and folders within each year are broken into brief alphabetical ranges, resulting in nearly two thousand folders on nineteen reels of film. Reels one through four contain correspondence from 1945, reels four through nine contain materials exchanged during 1946, and reels nine through nineteen contain the considerable correspondence of 1947. Correspondents include Harry S. Truman and members of his administration, Felix Frankfurter, Charl Ormond Williams, Walter White, Helen Gahagan Douglas, Trygve Lie, Madam Chiang Kai-shek, Henry Morgenthau Jr., and members of the Roosevelt family.

The death of Franklin D. Roosevelt overshadows all other topics in this varied collection. Throughout 1945, and on the anniversaries of FDR's birth and death in 1946 and 1947, Eleanor Roosevelt was deluged with mail commemorating his life. Letters written by citizens of all ages describe the impact FDR had on their lives and often include memorializing verse. Because the collection contains hundreds if not thousands of poems and letters, the death of FDR has been indexed as a major topic only in instances of notable correspondents or considerable concentrations within folders.

Interspersed with the good wishes of sympathy letters is hostile correspondence that reflects the emerging cold war with the USSR. Eleanor Roosevelt was frequently called upon to defend the organizations she supported (particularly Americans for Democratic Action), professional associates, personal friends, and her own political views from accusations of Communism. In her letters, Roosevelt walked a fine line, criticizing the policies of the Communist Soviet Union, while recommending that the United Nations negotiate with its leaders rather than strategize against them. Amid the atmosphere created by the House Committee of Un-American Activities, the internal threat was often perceived as graver than the one from overseas. Roosevelt charted an independent path, aiding citizens barred from employment by charges of Communist activities, while in other cases rejecting claims that accused organizations were free from Communist influence.

Another dominant debate of the time was the settlement of Palestine by Jewish refugees from war-torn Europe. In part because of her work at the United Nations, Eleanor Roosevelt received many letters on the issue, both those urging her increased support for Israeli statehood and those condemning Jews' claims to land. Letters commending Roosevelt generally received a pleasant acknowledgment, but correspondents writing anti-Semitic or political litanies drew fiery rebuttals, countering their arguments point by point. It is in these exchanges that Roosevelt's polished professionalism lifts to reveal a woman of aggressive conviction.

The documents also indicate the range of social connections and obligations of a former First Lady, from interceding on behalf of distant relations with loved ones missing in Europe, to sending bath towels to the future Queen Elizabeth II in honor of her marriage. Other issues that emerge from the files include race relations and education in the United States, work for the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, atrocities of the Holocaust, fund-raising for a variety of social causes, and personal financial matters. Because much of the collection consists of materials Eleanor Roosevelt received, the guide writer uses detailed descriptions in the Reel Index, Major Topics, to highlight correspondence and commentary by Eleanor Roosevelt.

LexisNexis UPA collections comprise other collections that pertain to the themes found in The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1952, Part 1: General Correspondence, 1945–1947. More on Eleanor Roosevelt can be found in The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1933–1945; The Papers of Eleanor Roosevelt, 1945–1962, Part 1: United Nations Correspondence and Publications and Part 2: United Nations Human Rights Commission Correspondence and Papers; and Documentary History of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidency, Volume 20: Eleanor Roosevelt, The Role of the First Lady. Documents exploring women's role in politics may be found in Papers of the League of Women Voters, 1918–1974, and The National Woman's Party Papers. Collections covering the cold war include Confidential U.S. State Department Files, Map Room Messages of President Truman (1945–1946), and President Harry S. Truman's Office Files, 1945–1953.

SOURCE NOTE

The material microfilmed for this publication is from the Eleanor Roosevelt Papers, Part II: April 5, 1945–1964, General Correspondence File, 1945–1962, Series: 1945–1952, in the custody of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Hyde Park, New York.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microform collection consists of a wide variety of correspondence received by Eleanor Roosevelt during the post-White House years. The General Correspondence File consists primarily of incoming correspondence except for a small quantity of carbon copies of outgoing correspondence. In general, carbon copies were not kept for every typed outgoing letter nor were copies made of outgoing handwritten material. The General Correspondence File is subdivided into three chronological series: 1945–1952, 1953–1956, and 1957–1962. The file folders of correspondence in each series are arranged in alphabetical order, with the individual documents in chronological order within each folder.

LexisNexis has microfilmed all of the documents dated 1945 through 1947 within each alphabetically arranged folder in the 1945–1952 series as The Eleanor Roosevelt Papers from the FDR Library, General Correspondence, Part 1: 1945–1947. A small number of documents outside the 1945–1947 time frame have been microfilmed. These are primarily responses or follow-up letters to earlier correspondence and have been included in an effort to provide the researcher with a complete record on a specific topic or action.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

UPA would like to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park, New York. Mr. Raymond Teichman and his staff were most helpful and patient in providing the support necessary for completion of this microform. Their efforts are greatly appreciated.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the principal correspondents in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 4: 0504 directs the researcher to the folder that begins at Frame 0504 of Reel 4. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear in the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 16: 0118 directs the researcher to the folder that begins at Frame 0118 of Reel 16. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear in the film.
