INTRODUCTION

The presidency of Lyndon Johnson marked a transitional period in the history of U.S. foreign policy and diplomacy. The cold war persisted, shaping American responses to various issues, most notably the war in Vietnam. Responding to dramatic changes in the emerging international system, the Johnson administration cautiously moved in the direction of new approaches toward its major adversaries, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China. As tensions with old enemies eased, ties with allies loosened, causing strains in the American alliance system and in particular within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). The economic burdens imposed by Vietnam and by two decades of cold war also forced the administration to devise new approaches to such issues as foreign aid and economic development in the Third World. The Johnson years thus marked a time of adjustment and adaptation between the unqualified globalism and militant anticommunism of the early Kennedy years and the detente and retrenchment of Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger.

The Vietnam War was Johnson's major problem and more than anything else caused the destruction of his presidency. Inheriting from Kennedy a growing if still qualified commitment to an independent, non-Communist South Vietnam, Johnson gradually committed the United States to a large-scale, if limited, war against North Vietnam. Despite the commitment of more than 500,000 troops and vast sums of money, the United States could not compel North Vietnam to stop its support for the National Liberation Front (NLF) of South Vietnam, and the rise of domestic opposition to the war increasingly limited Johnson's options. In the aftermath of the Communist Tet Offensive of early 1968, Johnson, without abandoning his original goals, put a ceiling on the American military commitment, made new overtures for a negotiated settlement of the war, and withdrew himself from the presidential race.

Although it dominated the Johnson presidency in many ways, Vietnam was not the only area of crisis. Closer to home, the administration confronted a major upheaval in Panama in 1964 and sent troops to the Dominican Republic in 1965 to head off the perceived threat of a Communist takeover. It also had to deal with a crisis in Cyprus, which threatened relations with America's NATO allies, Greece and Turkey, and another in the Congo. In June 1967, long-standing tensions between Arabs and Israelis exploded into the so-called Six Day War, which, at least for a moment, pushed even Vietnam off the top of the administration's foreign policy agenda.

The cold war underwent significant modification during the Johnson years. The international system was changing from the bipolar structure of the immediate post-World War II years to a "polycentric" system with multiple centers of power. The emergence of the Sino-Soviet split in the early 1960s provided new opportunities and posed new challenges for the United States. Following precedents set by Kennedy during his last months in office, Johnson sought to ease tensions with the Soviet Union, toning down U.S. rhetoric and attempting to negotiate consular agreements and cultural exchanges. Building on the foundations Kennedy had laid with the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, Johnson took cautious steps toward containing the nuclear arms race, negotiating a nonproliferation treaty and initiating strategic arms limitation talks. The administration also took hesitant steps away from America's long-standing and deeply entrenched China policy. The People's Republic was still viewed as the nation's number one enemy, and the Cultural Revolution of the mid and late 1960s inhibited any major steps toward rapprochement. But some U.S. officials increasingly viewed the isolation and containment of mainland China as outmoded and untenable, and they began to advocate edging away from Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist government on Taiwan and exploring the possibility of contacts with Mao Tse-tung's Communist regime. Secret U.S. Communist Chinese contacts in Warsaw initiated in the Eisenhower years continued and even expanded during the Johnson presidency.

Changes in relations with old adversaries were paralleled by growing strains in relations with old allies. As fear of the Soviet Union eased in the 1960s, the ties that had bound the Western alliance inevitably loosened. America's major European allies opposed U.S. escalation of the war in Vietnam, and the economic strains imposed by the war and a growing balance of payments problem caused demands in Congress to remove sizable increments of U.S. troops from Europe. Economic strains in West Germany and Britain added to the turmoil, producing reductions of forces and further demands on America's already overstrained global military posture. The most dramatic crisis in the alliance occurred in 1966 when President Charles de Gaulle withdrew France from military participation in NATO.

Conflict between the industrialized nations and the Third World—the North-South division—began to rival the more traditional East-West conflict that had characterized the cold war. Preoccupied with Vietnam and overextended economically, the Johnson administration increasingly stressed regional solutions to economic problems in the Southern Hemisphere and promoted self-help and private investment instead of sizable U.S. foreign aid. In Latin America, especially, the shift was evident in the demise of the Alliance for Progress, in the move toward private capital in economic development, and in the steady decline of U.S. prestige from the heady days of the early 1960s.

When he assumed the presidency in November 1963, Johnson inherited Kennedy's top foreign policy advisers and his system for using them. Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara were, of course, nominally the president's top advisers on military and foreign policy issues. Distrustful of established bureaucracy, however, Kennedy had added a layer between the White House and the executive departments. He scrapped Eisenhower's cumbersome National Security Council (NSC) apparatus, the object of much criticism by 1960, and appointed Harvard dean McGeorge Bundy as special assistant for national security affairs. With an office in the White House basement, Bundy assembled a small staff of experts and created the White House's own Situation Room, installing equipment that provided direct access to Defense Department, State Department, and Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) cable traffic. Kennedy preferred ad hoc, informal meetings to Eisenhower's more regular, formal style. Bundy's job was to organize those meetings, see that the right people were there, and report results back to departments and agencies.

Johnson adapted the Kennedy system to his own management style. Sensitive to his lack of experience and expertise in foreign policy and eager to maintain continuity with his predecessor's policies, he retained McNamara, Rusk, and Bundy. A more orderly administrator than Kennedy, he generally preferred to deal directly with his cabinet officers. Fearful to the point of paranoia about leaks and disagreements within his official family, he preferred small intimate meetings of top officials—"the principals"—to Kennedy's larger, more free-wheeling affairs.

Still, the NSC staff of some forty-eight people remained in operation and performed essentially the same functions as in the Kennedy administration. Three experts tracked regional issues and crises, while others maintained liaison with the Joint Chiefs of Staff and CIA. The NSC manned interdepartmental committees and task forces. It kept the White House informed of what was going on in the departments and agencies, apprising the latter of the president's needs and thinking. It remained a "message center" for the White House. As manager of the flow of information, as expeditor, and as watchdog of the labyrinthine federal bureaucracy, Bundy was closer to the president than any cabinet officer. He was usually the first to see Johnson on an issue and the last to see him before a decision was made. During the months when the commitment in Vietnam was taking form, for example, Bundy was a key figure. The national security adviser was in Vietnam when the NLF struck Pleiku on February 7, 1965, and he came back a firm advocate of escalation. In addition, during the summer of 1965, he became the chief public spokesman for and defender of the increasingly controversial Vietnam policy.

Walt Whitman Rostow replaced Bundy in early 1966 and gradually assumed even greater functions. He assisted in the preparation of some presidential speeches, helped arrange White House visits by foreign dignitaries, conducted regular briefings of journalists, and drafted letters to congressmen. His most important function was to facilitate decision-making by ensuring that the president had before him the widest range of possible options, generating the material needed for him to analyze those options, and making available the latest intelligence. He often represented the White House on interdepartmental coordinating committees. Rostow also set the agenda for the president's famous Tuesday lunches, giving him direct liaison with the secretaries of state and defense. Through a staff member, Air Force Colonel Robert Ginsburgh, he also maintained informal contact with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Like Bundy, Rostow was responsible for seeing that once presidential decisions were made, the necessary departments and agencies were informed of the decisions and followed up on the tasks assigned them.

The NSC did more than serve as a neutral clearinghouse for information; Bundy and Rostow met daily with the president and often pushed their own recommendations. In 1965, Bundy went to Vietnam and to the Dominican Republic to serve as Johnson's eyes and ears, and in each case he exerted powerful influence in decisions for intervention and escalation.

Because of the National Security Council's central role in the decision-making process, its files comprise a crucial source for the study of foreign policy in the Johnson years. The major file, the Country File, is organized geographically with separate file groups for individual countries. The National Security File also consists of a number of additional files that provide complementary and in some cases supplementary materials on foreign policy issues. In the period after World War II, the agencies of the federal government proliferated, and as U.S. foreign policy expanded to global dimensions and took on additional tasks, more and more agencies took part in its shaping and implementation. As the title suggests, the Agency File of the National Security File is organized by individual department or agency. It reflects the involvement in foreign affairs of the major departments such as the Defense, State, and Treasury Departments and such major agencies as the Agency for International Development (AID) and U.S. Information Agency (USIA). It also documents the involvement of other departments such as the Labor, Agriculture, and Commerce Departments, and other bodies such as the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) and the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). Also included are materials relating to international organizations such as the United Nations and regional groupings such as NATO and the Alliance for Progress. The Agency File also contains extensive material relating to the Senior Interdepartmental Group (SIG), a committee formed in March 1966 in an effort to promote greater cooperation and coordination among the numerous disparate groups involved in foreign policy formulation and implementation.

On occasion, the executive branch created special committees or commissions to study and frame recommendations on specific problems or issues, and the National Security File, Committee File, reflects the activities of some of the more important of these groups.

A Committee on Nuclear Proliferation met during 1964 and early 1965 to consider the various ramifications of that increasingly important problem. With the easing of the cold war and the development of polycentrism in both blocs, the administration began to reevaluate the various trade restrictions and embargoes imposed on the Soviet Union and its satellites. The president therefore also appointed a Special Committee on U.S. Trade Relations with East European Countries and the Soviet Union, which met in the spring of 1965. The Committee File also includes material on the White House Conference on International Cooperation and the President's Committee on the Warren Commission report on the assassination of John F. Kennedy.

A third part of the special files of the National Security File comprises a Name File and a Speech File. As the title suggests, the Name File is organized by the name of the subject or correspondent. The majority of the names represented in this file are White House staffers like Joseph Califano, Douglass Cater, Chester Cooper, Michael Forrestal, and Jack Valenti. Other names are also represented, including Senators J. William Fulbright, Mike Mansfield, and Robert Kennedy, former presidents Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey.

The Speech File consists of copies of the president's speeches ranging from his dramatic speech to the Joint Session of Congress on November 27, 1963, shortly after taking office, to his State of the Union message of January 1968.

The Agency File, Committee File, and Name and Speech Files contain materials reflecting the diverse activities and roles of the various governmental and nongovernmental bodies and individuals involved. They include correspondence; memoranda; cables and reports from and to individual agencies, departments, and committees; and working papers and final reports of several committees. Also included are speeches and draft press statements, studies produced outside the U.S. government, and records of meetings and conversations.

The topics covered range over the spectrum of major and minor foreign policy issues faced by the Johnson administration during its tumultuous five years in office. Not surprisingly, there is material on the Vietnam War, the most agonizing, frustrating, and ultimately destructive issue faced by the administration. These files include documents dealing with the various peace moves and negotiations, the increasingly controversial issue of press coverage, and the vital question of possible Chinese intervention in the war. Also included are war games conducted by the JCS that predicted with some degree of accuracy the direction the war in Vietnam would take. There is also material on the crises in the Congo and in Cyprus, the conflict in NATO, and the increasingly urgent problem of proliferation of nuclear weapons. Foreign aid became a more controversial issue in the Johnson years and a growing area of dispute between the executive and Congress, and this is evidenced in the files.

These files also deal with other subjects that reflect in full measure the great range of issues that concern modern U.S. foreign policy. There is material on the peaceful uses of atomic energy, the problem of birth control in developing countries, racial discrimination near military installations in the United States, and East-West trade. The diversity of issues and persistence of the cold war are reflected in documents relating to a possible Soviet effort to use sunflower oil supplies to displace the United States as the supplier of sunflower oil in the Middle East, and thus, some administration officials feared, possibly giving control of Middle Eastern sources of petroleum to the Soviet Union.

The Agency File, Committee File, and Name and Speech Files, especially when used with the National Security File, Country Files, provide indispensable documentation for the foreign and national security policy of the United States during a critical period. They document in important ways the work of a sprawling federal bureaucracy and international and regional groups. They suggest the emergence of important new issues and document the work of various individuals. The historical record of the Johnson years is still far from complete, but the considerable volume and remarkable diversity of the files in this group provide an indispensable foundation for analyzing U.S. foreign policy in this era.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

"This Nation will keep its commitments from South Vietnam to West Berlin." This statement from Lyndon B. Johnson's first address before a joint session of Congress on November 27, 1963, highlighted his determination to maintain America's role in foreign affairs. While domestic issues were of primary interest to Johnson, he took on the burden of Vietnam, the cold war, and various world crises with the determination that the United States would remain strong, "prepared to defend ourselves and friends, and work for a just world peace." The Vietnam War is considered the central focus of the Johnson administration's foreign affairs efforts. But it would be wrong to think of this period in terms of Vietnam alone, for the administration also faced crises in Latin America, Europe, Africa, and the Middle East.

When a president makes a decision, he seeks all the information he can get. This information is gleaned from a wide variety of sources. During the Johnson administration, the primary repository of national security and foreign affairs documentation was the National Security File (NSF) maintained in the White House.

The NSF consisted of the working files of President Johnson's special assistants for national security affairs, McGeorge Bundy and Walt W. Rostow. Documents in these files originated in the offices of Bundy and Rostow, their staffs, in the various executive departments and agencies, especially those having to do with foreign affairs and national defense, and in diplomatic and military posts around the world.

This installment of the Johnson National Security File describes the promulgation and implementation of the Johnson administration's foreign and national security policies. Reports, memoranda, cables, and correspondence, subdivided into specific file categories, will provide the researcher with a treasure trove of inside-the-administration information on the policy-making apparatus and the policy makers. In addition, these files will provide perspectives on Johnson as a crisis manager and his administration's perception and assessment of various critical foreign policy issues and responses.

It has been stated that the Johnson presidency represented a significant period in the history of American foreign policy. The National Security File provides an indispensable documentary record of the dramatic changes in U.S. foreign policy.

Agency File

This micropublication provides an in-depth look at the Johnson administration's formulation and implementation of national security policies, handling of international crises, and policymakers. The collection consists of three individual parts: Agency File; Committee File; and Name and Speech Files.

The Agency File highlights the activities and White House interaction between various foreign policy and related agencies and departments, the National Security Council, and various foreign/international policy-related White House committees. Foreign policy agencies and departments include the Agency for International Development, Central Intelligence Agency, Defense Department, Joint Chiefs of Staff, Peace Corps, State Department, and United States Information Agency. Related agencies and departments include the Agriculture Department, Atomic Energy Commission, Export-Import Bank, Federal Bureau of Investigation and Justice Department, and National Aeronautics and Space Agency. In addition, there are materials on U.S. activities in international combinations and organizations. These include the Central Treaty Organization (Asia), International Atomic Energy Agency, International Labor Organization, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and United Nations.

SOURCE NOTE

The documents reproduced in this micropublication were filmed from the Papers of Lyndon B. Johnson, Papers as President, National Security File, Name File and Speech File, in the Lyndon B. Johnson Library, Austin, Texas.

EDITORIAL NOTE

UPA's Lyndon B. Johnson National Security Files, 1963–1969, consists of selected series from the National Security File (NSF). The series included in this series of UPA micropublications are the Agency File, Committee File, Name File, and Speech File.

This micropublication, Agency File, includes those materials processed and opened as of January 1993. Withdrawal Sheets listing still-classified material have been filmed. UPA has microfilmed all folders and documents as they are arranged at the Johnson Library. The documentation in the Agency File is arranged by agency and/or international organization, and thereunder by topic. The documents within folders are arranged in general chronological order. Documents in each folder have been individually numbered by the library staff. By consulting the Document Withdrawal Sheet(s), the researcher will be able to ascertain where documents are missing in the file folder.

REEL INDEX

Entries in this index refer to specific folders within the Lyndon B. Johnson National Security Files, 1963–1969: Agency File. In the interest of accessing the materials within the folders, this index denotes significant issues, events, actions, and policy decisions under the heading Major Topics. The four-digit number on the far left is the frame number at which the file folder begins. This project contains the Agency File, which consists of information relating to the executive departments and agencies of the U.S. government. Information in brackets is additional information on the folder titles provided by UPA. UPA has also included, where possible, the inclusive month/year of the documents in each file folder. These dates are denoted within brackets. Additional material on the folder titles provided by the LBJ Library is included in parenthesis. References to President Johnson are abbreviated LBJ.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major subjects contained in this collection. The reel: frame numbers appearing below the subject entries and next to the subentries identify where in the Reel Index documents containing these subjects can be found. Each reel: frame number consists of a reel number located to the left of the colon and a four-digit frame number located to its right. For example, 3: 0452 indicates a document located on Reel 3, Frame 0452. University Publications of America (UPA) has included complete descriptions of the documents contained in this collection in the Reel Index, which comprises the initial section of this guide. Lyndon B. Johnson is abbreviated LBJ.

In the interest of space, material in the file folders on Reels 12 through Reel 15 dealing with DOD military exercises and materials in the file folders on Reel 15 dealing with DOD safety rules are not broken down in the subject index. They are listed generically under Military exercises, U.S. and Nuclear weapons systems. Researchers seeking the names of specific military exercises or the safety rules for specific nuclear weapons systems are directed to those file folders dealing with those subjects.
